Speaking of Emergencies.
Mainly About Money.
Silver and Gold.
60 to 1.
Generous Mr. Couzens.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

PRESIDENT HOOVER reminds Congress that the national government can use "emergency powers" now as in war.

There is no lack of power in the federal government, and the President, with the Russian Czar and Turkish Sultan thrown into Time's wastebasket, is the most powerful ruler on earth.

The thing is to decide what ought to be done and then do it.

WE KNOW THREE things that are needed, CONFIDENCE, MONEY AND EMPLOYMENT.

The government has power to provide all three. It could print the money needed, and with the name U. S. A. on it that would be the best money in the world.

Do you doubt it? You would take any plain piece of paper, marked "I O U $100,000,000—John D. Rockefeller" and you would not discount it by as much as an eighth of 1 per cent, if you were sure of the signature. The world will take Uncle Sam's I. O. U. up to 10 billions and twice that.

The difficulty is that our financial powers are accustomed to get their rake off, in the way of commission and interest on any money that the government creates. The financial powers are also THE GOVERNMENT since they control it. They will not allow Uncle Sam to use his credit except through money lent by them and if they happen not to have it, or if they are frightened to death, as at present, and cannot or will not supply what is needed except on usurious terms, they will not let the government operate, free of their financial tutelage.

THE PRESIDENT would exercise "emergency powers" wisely if he would simply say "what money the government needs, it will print and use, without permission from financial small fry, that are creatures of government power. If that be inflation, make the most of it. But please note that payment with money thus issued will be legal payment of any obligation within the boundaries of the United States."

In war, the emergency calls for men, their blood and their lives. The government did not hesitate to take three million men, ship them three thousand miles, pay them next to nothing, and require risk of life from all of them. The protests of mothers did not count. IT WAS AN EMERGENCY.

This is an emergency, in which cash is needed. Why must the government now pay more attention to some asinine financier, afraid of losing profits, than it pays in war time to a mother, afraid of losing her son?

The explanation and the fact is that our government is a financial enterprise, controlled by financiers. We have not had a President to resist that financial power, since Andrew Jackson.

Congress proposes to investigate silver and discover what is the matter with it. The President is said to approve if gold is included in the investigation.

This country, a great silver producer, fights to knock down all silver's price, in favor of gold, produced in America on a very small scale. The amount of silver produced the world over, for many years past has averaged less than 13 times the amount, weight for weight, of gold produced. But, gold, instead of selling at 12, or 20 times the price of silver, sells at more than 60 times the price of silver. And of eighteen hundred million human beings on earth sixteen hundred millions have practically no gold.

JUST WHAT THEY are to use "for money," in buying from us, seems a problem. The British have dropped the gold standard, and are prospering; we hang to it desperately, as though our only possession were our few pitiful billions of gold and you know what is happening to us. You know, also, what is happening to our gold. Europe, France especially, draws it out of our vaults at the rate of ten and twenty millions a day.

Uncle Sam is like an old Fafnir, with a thousand leeches sucking his golden blood.

SENATOR COUZENS wants the high income taxes of war time restored, and uses three hours of the Senate's time talking about it. Unless the public is misinformed, Mr. Couzens, who used to be a little clerk in a coal yard, and got thirty million dollars through luck and the genius of Henry Ford, carefully put his entire fortune in securities that pay NO INCOME TAX.

If some Senator introduces a bill to make ALL incomes taxable, including even Senator Couzens' income, which pays nothing, will he vote for that proposition? Will he, perhaps, introduce such a bill?

OF ONE THING he may be sure, he is paving the way to that kind of legislation and to other things that will suit him even less.

One who owes a great fortune to the genius of another man should not be too emphatic in claiming the right to dispose of the earnings of those that really work. Can you imagine Couzens, spending the income of thirty millions, earned by Ford's genius, paying no income tax on that gigantic income, and solemnly demanding that Ford pay 50 per cent on what Ford EARNS. That's like a big-toed sloth voting to tax the hay of a plough horse.

It might be a good thing for Michigan to let Mr. Couzens stay home and spend his untaxed income there, after this term.

HOPEWELL, N. J., May 14. — Fresh trails — varying from a description of the seafaring gang, with whom John Hughes Curtis negotiated, to an analysis of the soil which held the infant's battered body — were opened tonight in the wide-flung search for the murderers of the Lindbergh baby.

In the three-car garage, converted into police headquarters on the day following the March 1 night when the child was kidnaped, the "brains" of the investigating army worked feverishly to capitalize their latest information.

Curtis told of the type of boat used by the supposed kidnapers with whom he had been in contact.

The rogues' galleries of the nation were scrutinized.

Curtis told of the point where he and Col. Charles A. Lindbergh last attempted to communicate with the gang—a position off Cape May, N. J., at which the Colonel and Curtis found themselves Thursday night when the body of the child was discovered in the woods less than five miles from his home.

All of these data were relayed by radio to the Coast Guard.

The "Jafsie," who negotiated through newspaper advertisements and paid $50,000 ransom for Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in a Bronx cemetery, made his surprising statement as he left his home to mail a letter.

Earlier in the day, after he had appeared at the office of Charles B. McLaughlin, Bronx District Attorney, Dr. Condon said:

PENNA. G. O. P. PUSSYFOOTS ON DRY ISSUE

Chicago Delegates Hear Davis Demand Beer, but Sidestep Mackrell Plea.

Reed Ignores Prohibition, Believed to Have Brought Orders From Party Chiefs.

By MARK SHIELDS

PHILADELPHIA, May 14.—Pennsylvania's delegation to the Republican National Convention this afternoon pussyfooted on the prohibition question, refusing to consider a resolution introduced by Register of Wills Joseph N. Mackrell, of Pittsburgh, demanding a repeal plank in the national platform.

Instead, the Mackrell resolution, along with others less controversial, was referred to a committee headed by Senator David A. Reed. The committee, in addition to Reed, consists of State Senator John J. McClure, Lieut. Gov. Edward Shannon, H. J. Crawford, of Venango County, Dr. Robert B. Greer, of Butler, and Congressman James M. Beck, acting as counsel.

DAVIS FOR BEER

The action of the delegates followed a meeting of the state committee at which Gen. Edward Martin had been elected state chairman. Following which Senator James J. Davis had unqualifiedly declared for the legal manufacture and sale of beer and light wine, with eventual repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

It was the only incident of the day which aroused any difference in the party council, and that difference was quickly smothered, noted wets assisting in preventing consideration of the Mackrell resolution. After William S. Vare had been named chairman of the delegation at Chicago, and upon the selection of other officers, including Reed as Pennsylvania's member of the resolutions committee to write the platform, a resolution was introduced by former Senator Horace W. Schantz that all platform suggestions be offered to a committee for report at Chicago.

Before Vare could put the question, Mackrell asked recognition to protest, declaring that the primary vote of April, when Davis was overwhelmingly elected on a wet platform, was a mandate to the delegates to declare for repeal of the prohibition laws. Mackrell said:

"The resolution introduced by Senator Schantz, to me, is

Rains Keep City's Park Courts Closed

Anne Recuperates After Collapse Due to Tragedy

HOPEWELL, N. J., May 14.—(AP.)—Displaying unusual recuperative ability, the frail mother of the kidnaped and slain Lindbergh baby again took an active interest late today in the conduct of her desolate household atop the Sourland Mountains.

Last night her strength wavered for the first time during the long strain and a physician was consulted. At her insistence she had been told the details of the finding of her first-born.

She retired early, but this afternoon she again exhibited the calm and composure that has been a remarkable characteristic of the tragedy.

A friend and visitor said:

"They're the kind of people that the harder things get, the stiffer their backbones become."

Late in August she expects another child.

Reports persisted she and her aviator-husband will go abroad to remain until after the child is born.

One report was that they would leave on June 4 on the Ile de France. It was reported they intended to go to a friend's chateau in France.

There is also a possibility, it was said, that they may go to the Morrow estate in Maine for the rest and seclusion they desire and need so badly.

If they do leave the Sourland countryside, it is generally believed they will never return to that hilltop house into which stark tragedy stalked the night of March 1.

Walker's Beer Parade Cheered by Million

100,000 Take Part In N. Y. Protest On Prohibition.

NEW YORK, May 14.—(Universal)—Mayor Walker led more than 100,000 New Yorkers through the center of the city today in a mighty movement for the legalization of beer to reduce taxation and improve economic conditions. The parade was the biggest civic procession of the century—vibrant, colorful, representative — lasting late into the night.

And it was a dignified demonstration, impressive in its character, as in its dimensions.

Great, orderly masses of men and women from every trade and profession, of every social level, marched shoulder to shoulder through Fifth avenue and Central Park West, simply to show all concerned the city's sentiment against the Eighteenth Amendment.

A million or more persons cheered the marchers from sidewalks and windows and roofs, waving flags and streamers, as the procession swung smartly along the avenues. There was plenty of humor in it—with floats showing huge tankards; the foam streaming down the sides; comedians from the musical comedies capering in costume and comic placards raised on high.

There was plenty of pathos in it, too—in the long line of labor organizations, struggling through the slough of depression.

Mayor Walker declared the demonstration inspiring. He led the procession twice, at the start and in the evening when the line was shifted to move straight down Fifth avenue.

Committee members in the parade were led by Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, Mrs. James McVickar and Mrs. Malcolm Meacham.

House Vote On Beer Bill Now Assured

WASHINGTON, May 14.—A vote on 2.75 per cent beer in the House before Congress adjourns was assured today when the one hundred and forty-fifth signature to a petition of representatives was signed by Representative Carl Bachman, of West Virginia, Republican whip.

The earliest a vote on the O'Connor-Hull bill can be obtained under the House rules is May 23.

Providing for amendment to the Volstead act, only a majority vote is necessary to pass the O'Connor-Hull bill.

Betrayal of Trust Laid to Officials By Jury's Verdict

By WILLIAM PEARR, Staff Correspondent

BUTLER, Pa., May 14.—Mayor Charles H. Kline tonight faced the possibility of having to spend one year in prison. He and Bertram L. Succop, fired by him as city supplies director, today stood convicted of misdemeanor in office by a jury which wrangled for 32 hours before reaching a verdict.

Much stiffer was the verdict against Succop. Kline was convicted on only one count, and acquitted on 12 others.

Succop was found guilty on 29 counts and acquitted on 10.

ONE-YEAR PENALTY

Maximum penalty is one year imprisonment on each count and $500 fine. The conviction, if sustained, means Kline's removal from office. A motion for a new trial has acted as a stay.

In event of an adverse decision, an appeal can be made to a higher court and would act as a further stay. Since Kline has one and a half years to serve as Mayor, it would be possible for litigation to extend over that period and the executive complete his term of office before the case is finally determined. It was evident that Kline will not resign. The Mayor was so quoted and Defense Attorney Charles B. Prichard declared:

"Resignation from office would be ridiculous. The conviction will not be final until the case is given a reverse decision on the pending appeal, or reaches the higher courts for final action."

Some comfort was offered both defendants by the jury's recommendation they be given "the lightest possible sentence."

The Mayor, absent for the first time since the trial started two weeks ago, was in his room in the Nixon Hotel when the verdict was read in court.

COURTROOM SILENT

A shocked silence dominated the courtroom for a brief minute after the court crier read the findings, for few had predicted the Mayor would be convicted.

Succop, flanked by his two brothers and young son at the defense table, flushed as he heard the verdict which may send him, too, to prison. Then he recovered his composure and moved to an anteroom where he accepted philosophically the sympathy of well-wishers.

Thus was written the climax to the investigation begun more than a year ago which brought charges that Kline and Succop

MAYOR'S WIFE RETAINS CALM

Mrs. Charles H. Kline took news of her husband's conviction at Butler for malfeasance in office yesterday calmly.

She received word of the jury's verdict in the Kline apartment in Park Mansions, Schenley Park. Miss Esther Johnson, her sister, was with her.

The Mayor's conviction came as an unwelcome surprise to many Pittsburgh politicians and to members of the police department.

Supt. of Police Peter P. Walsh said:

"I was surprised to hear that the Mayor was found guilty, as I thought there was not sufficient evidence produced at the trial to warrant such a verdict. The Mayor had nothing whatever to do with the transaction in which he was found guilty."

City Solicitor Charles A. Waldschmidt would make no comment on the verdict, but expressed interest in the motion for a new trial, inquiring as to progress of the proceedings.

Garner Given Pencil 'To Balance Budget'

WASHINGTON, May 14.—(AP.)—If Speaker Garner needs a blue pencil in his efforts to balance the budget he has it now—and plenty of it.

He received today from the Bonehead Club at Harlingen, Tex., in his district, a pencil three feet long and as big around as the ice man's forearm.

It was labeled: "To balance the budget."

Within a few months, according to county records, the prices of bridge railings dropped more than 50 per cent.

Lewis Fights Taxes, Urges 5-Billion Bonds Not to Be Paid in This Generation

International News Service

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Savagely attacking the pending revenue bill as "unnecessary and unjustified," Senator Lewis (Dem.), of Illinois, today offered verbally a substitute proposal for a bond issue of $5,000,000,000 to balance the budget.

During the debate today it developed that a vote on whether to impose the highest income taxes in history will be had Monday.

Senate leaders agreed that they would not force a vote today on the Couzens proposal to write into the billion dollar revenue bill normal income levies of 6 per cent on the first $4,000 and 12 per cent on all incomes above that figure with surtaxes ranging upward to 65 per cent.

The bond issue, Lewis explained, would be exempt from principal and interest payments during this generation. It would be used for a great construction program and to take up the Treasury deficits.

Lewis ridiculed the entire fiscal policy of the administration and of Congress. He said:

"A multiplicity of taxes hangs over the heads of the people—taxes on land, income, estate, business, everything. These taxes constitute a threat of disaster. The Treasury reaches its ferocious hand of taxation everywhere and yet it has not seen fit to contribute directly to the relief of the nation's suffering people.

"The President's veto of the Democratic tariff proposal has laid low for burial any hope of relief from the tax exactions of the Smoot-Hawley tariff act. The proposal for new taxes cannot be justified on any ground consistent with the welfare of the citizens."

Lewis ridiculed the [illegible] of [illegible] the budget. Declaring that no real effort is being made to cut down the tremendous and ever-mounting costs of government, he cited as one instance of federal waste the marble temples, social and commercial, such as that occupied by the Secretary of Commerce. This structure cost more than $17,000,000.

President Hoover was rapped as being ready to veto any measure when a bill sent to him runs counter to his political advantage."

KERR TO MAKE REPORT ON TAGS

A public report on traffic court receipts since passage of the codified traffic ordinance which eliminates the evils of "tag fixing" will be made soon by City Controller James P. Kerr.

Under stipulations of the legislation the Controller is required to make public reports both to Council and Mayor Charles H. Kline. Each tag issued is to be accounted for, whether it was lost, the defendant fined or acquitted.

Formerly distribution of traffic tags for violations of the automobile laws was handled by the Department of Public Safety. The codified ordinance relegates this matter into the hands of the Controller. The legislation was sponsored by the Better Traffic Committee, Western Pennsylvania Safety Council and other organizations.

GARNER URGES HOOVER TO KEEP SILENT 30 DAYS

Speaker Visions Recovery Of Confidence Dependent On Presidential 'Gag.'

WASHINGTON, May 14.—(INS)—Delivering a spontaneous broadside at President Hoover, Speaker Garner of the House, today charged the President with doing more to freeze the confidence of the people than any other person.

Discussing the President's new "statement-a-day" policy, Garner urged that Mr. Hoover turn to the silence of Calvin Coolidge for 30 days.

The Speaker, who has kept silent during the President's statements criticizing Congress, expressed his thoughts at a conference with newspapermen.

BLAMES PRESIDENT

Garner was particularly aroused by Mr. Hoover's statement of yesterday in which he said the confidence of the people had been frozen. He declared:

"The President has done more, in my opinion, to discourage the people and freeze confidence than any one person or event.

"He has leaped from one thing to another and I believe the people have come to the belief that the President is speaking from an individual and selfish standpoint.

"The President says confidence is frozen.

"If he'll not make a statement for 30 days I'll almost guarantee that frozen confidence will thaw out.

SCORES 'PROPAGANDA'

"The President can't get over that old idea of propaganda he used in selling mining stocks.

"Why, when he gives out a statement about the Lindbergh baby he signs it himself instead of letting the Department of Justice, which is responsible, do it.

"No other President has done that. But he has the propaganda idea imbedded in him."

Garner said the President had been issuing statements since 1929 and that the "confidence of the people had steadily frozen up until it is solid." He said:

"Honestly, I believe that the President's continual statements in the last two years have done more to keep the minds of the people unsettled as to what is in the future than anything else."

BUDGET ISSUE

He observed that the President yesterday did not confine himself to "a statement a-day," but issued a "double-barreled" statement.

When his attention was called to the President's statements on balancing the budget, the Speaker responded:

"You may remember that on November 11 last I said the budget must be balanced. There was nothing from the White House at that time."

He added:

"The one good thing you can say is that when he sees a sound suggestion, he adopts it."

Garner's attitude was taken as a plain indication that the House leaders—thus far left out on relief plans—intend to have their say before a program is adopted.

Officers quoted the youth as saying he had been in that room for two years "because I wanted to."

ASKS COMPANY HEADS TO QUIZ

When State Senator Frank J. Harris' Senate committee convenes again Tuesday morning to further probe the voting machine question, representatives of the Automatic Voting Machine Company of Jamestown, the Shoup Voting Machine Company and the Poole Engineering and Machine Company may be on hand to testify. Louis McGrew, editor, also will be called, Harris said, to tell what he has hinted that he knows about huge contributions alleged to have been made to campaign funds by vote machine promoters, Harris said yesterday.

"I have sent a letter and telegram to them (vote machine company officials) inviting them to be here for the hearing. I might call Lou McGrew, who has intimated that he knows something about a contribution to a political campaign of $150,000 or $200,000."

The Senate committee will convene in Court Room No. 3 Tuesday morning.

Erie Mayor Refuses Pay Cut, 'Too Poor'

ERIE, Pa., May 14.—(AP)—Mayor James P. Rossiter refused today to reduce his own salary and said:

"I'm a poor man. I don't even own a car."

Safety Director John Dundon also refused a salary cut. Other city directors agreed to a voluntary reduction and Council slashed the pay of city employes 5 per cent.

MILITARY RULE NEEDED TO END DOPE TRAFFIC

Corrupt Political System Makes Enforcement of Law Difficult, He Says.

By FLOYD GIBBONS

(Copyright, 1932, [illegible] Inc.)

NEW YORK, May 14.—Hello everybody!

Continental U. S. A. has stretched out its arms to welcome Lieut. and Mrs. Massie and Mrs. Grace Fortescue home from Hawaii.

In the old sailing ship days mariners rode home over the same Pacific waters after blood-chilling adventures among savage islanders. But none of those mariners' adventures equaled the horrible ordeal through which this American Family Massie passed under the incompetent civil system of Hawaii.

Politicians responsible for the continuance of an Asiatic controlled civil system in Hawaii cannot close the records now that the Massies are safely home. Not by a long way.

FLOOD OF LETTERS

I've been getting a flood of letters lately ever since I suggested in these columns and over the radio that Hawaii is worthless to us as a national defense until the islands are placed under Army and Navy rule. Those letters came from everywhere.

Things the writers of those letters told me show that we have just scratched the surface in finding out what a dangerous situation there is in Hawaii.

Here is another thing Washington officials will have to deal with.

Hawaii has become the open door to the United States for narcotic smuggling.

Think that over. Hawaii, our Gibraltar of the Pacific, actually a gateway for a peace-time enemy that is just as deadly as a line of hostile battleships.

POVERTY RIDES WITH DOPE

Maybe Americans who do not use narcotics will not feel alarmed. But the government at Washington knows that death, crime, insanity and poverty ride with smuggled narcotics. Millions of dollars have been spent to enforce the Harrison drug act within the continental boundaries of the United States. Yet opium, the drug that can destroy nations, comes in through the very islands that were taken over 34 years ago for the sole purpose of defense.

If you think that narcotics are not a real national menace, glance at the history of China. Back in the 1830's China's civilization was centuries old. It was the richest country in the Orient. Yet, in the 10 years preceding 1836, opium brought there by foreign traders from India and Turkey, had virtually wrecked a country with three times the population of the United States. It was our own American Caleb Cushing who helped China to check utter ruin. But China never did shake off the opium curse entirely.

NOT FREE OF MENACE

The United States has never been free of the narcotic menace, but it is making a good fight.

Now, the loose, unrestrained semblance of authority, in the heart of our only Pacific defense opens the doors to a steady stream of dope from the Far East.

The narcotic smuggling system is simple. Over in the Orient the ports swarm with fishing junks. They can sail in and out whenever they please and stay at sea as long as they please. Once those lateen sails are set, a trip to Hawaiian waters is an easy matter. It is also an easy matter for members of the Far East opium rings to load the junks with as many cans of opium as they like.

All along the Hawaiian coast are hundreds of other junks, sailing in and out on fishing trips.

When the smugglers once get their opium into Hawaii, the rest is easy.

AVOID CUSTOMS QUIZ

Ships plying between Hawaii and the Mainland are coastwise vessels. That means they do not have to go through custom formalities because they have touched no foreign ports. There is nothing to prevent a passenger from walking on board with a quantity of narcotics and getting off with it at an American Pacific port.

Federal narcotic agents, of course, are constantly on the watch for smugglers, but they are under the heavy handicap of an open door in Hawaii for the original landing of opium on American soil.

The open door to narcotics would be closed with the Army and Navy in control of the Hawaiian Islands.

Then there is another thing. If a smuggler of Asiatic descent is caught white American lawyers are ready to step forward and defend him in the Asiatic-organized courts.

At home reputable lawyers refuse to stoop to the defense of known narcotic dealers. Many of them have been driven out of their practice for conniving with dope rings. There, in Hawaii, the outpost where ravaged women have no redress, narcotic smugglers find able white lawyers to fight and win their cases before sympathetic juries.

LAWS TWISTED

In a far-off outpost, where pickings are slim, there are lawyers and politicians who thrive by perverting loose laws to their own ends. They hold a political power that no mere handful of brow-beaten citizens can challenge.

Army and Navy rule over Hawaii would have prevented the attacks on women in the past. Today it would prevent a deadly stream of narcotics from entering the country. Tomorrow it would be ready to prevent a destroying army from landing on the Pacific coast.

KENTUCKY BANS CIVIL LIBERTIES STRIKEPROBERS

Party Headed by Malone, Hays Turned Back, But No Violence Marks Meeting.

BARBOURVILLE, Ky., May 14.—(AP)—The American Civil Liberties Union delegation was barred from the Bell County coal fields today by officers and citizens.

When the group led by Dudley Field Malone and Arthur Garfield Hays reached the county line separating Bell and Knox counties, a dozen automobiles met them. One machine was hurriedly turned cross-wise, effectually blocking the road.

NO DISORDER

The warning to stay out of Bell County was given without disorder and the group turned back. Knox County officers headed by Chief of Police Walter Mayhew, of Barbourville, took them in charge and headed them northward towards Laurel County, where at London last night they had been denied a federal injunction to prohibit interference with their visit.

On being told by Mayor J. M. Brooks of Pineville, and County Attorney Walter B. Smith they could not enter Bell County, Malone replied:

"All right, that establishes the point which we intended to test."

Malone added the visitors would accept the orders as closing the attempt to enter Bell County and would go back peacefully.

Both Mayor Brooks and County Attorney Smith said that they did not want to deny freedom of speech to the visitors and that under other circumstances they would not be halted. The Mayor's communication was a written statement which he handed to Malone.

HAYS FILES SUIT

LONDON, Ky., May 14.—(AP)—Returning here Arthur Garfield Hays, a leader of the American Civil Liberties Union group, filed a $100,000 personal damage suit against nine officers and citizens named as having blocked his progress at the Bell County line. It would test, he said, whether members of a community can legally prevent citizens from entering.

ARREST INSULL HOME PICKETS

CHICAGO, May 14.—(AP)—Ten college students were arrested today for picketing the Samuel Insull residence on Lake Shore drive with banners and placards protesting the treatment of Kentucky miners.

The placards proclaimed that Insull, Henry Ford and Andrew Mellon were the "real owners" of the coal mines in the turbulent Kentucky region.

Karl Borders, middle western secretary of the League for Industrial Democracy and representative of the Chicago Civil Liberties Committee, was lodged in a cell with the students when he went to furnish bail for them. A police lieutenant said he was "abusive."

Among students arrested was Paul Trimpy, 24, Somerset, Pa., of Garrett Institute, affiliated with Northwestern University.

APE SURPASSES HUMAN INFANT IN MENTAL RACE

Animal Treated Like Child In Unique Experiment; Pair Show Companionship.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., May 14.—(AP)—The striking story of a baby ape which learned faster in human home environment than did the human baby with which the ape lived was told in an address prepared for delivery here today at the annual meeting of the Midwestern Psychological Association by Dr. W. N. Kellogg, professor of experimental psychology at Indiana University.

Dr. and Mrs. Kellogg have just completed the unique psychological experiment of actually taking a baby chimpanzee into their own home with their own baby boy, and treating the ape as their own child.

The two were given the same care, and at the conclusion of the experiments, when the child was 19 and the ape 16½ months of age, the ape in most tests given it proved superior to the child.

TREAT APE AS CHILD

About a year ago, Dr. Kellogg obtained a leave of absence from the university. With financial assistance from the Social Science Research Council of New York City and the co-operation of Prof. Robert M. Yerkes of Yale University, Dr. and Mrs. Kellogg undertook the experiment. They moved to Orange Park, Fla., where the Yale experiment station is located. There they took into their home a baby chimpanzee 7½ months of age lent by the station.

They treated the animal as their child, clothed and fed it and cared for it exactly as they did their own baby boy. The two ate together and played together as brother and sister. They were extremely companionable, quarreled less than children usually do, learned to do things together, always under the watchful eye of Dr. and Mrs. Kellogg.

MANY TESTS MADE

The human and chimpanzee infants were tested carefully as the experiment went on for their ability to see pictures, to hear, to smell, to taste, to touch, to maintain their sense of balance.

The ape was found shortly to surpass the human being. It learned faster. It remembered longer. It was more co-operative and docile than the human child.

Neither the ape nor the child really learned to talk in the period covered by the experiment, though earlier investigators have claimed that they succeeded in getting apes to say a few words. Dr. Kellogg said:

"Someone some day may teach an ape to talk, but we think from our experience that this is unlikely."

Fight Plan to Drop County Safety Unit

A protest against the County Commissioners' plan to abolish the sign and safety division of the Department of Highways as part of their economy program, was dispatched in letter form yesterday by the Pittsburgh Motor Club.

The protest cited the 379 deaths and 6,151 injuries in Allegheny County from auto accidents in 1931 as sufficient reason for retaining the safety division.

REPEAL URGED BY GRAND JURY

ERIE, Pa., May 14.—Repeal of the national prohibition law was urged by the Erie County grand jury in its final report to the Erie County Court at noon today. Judge William E. Hirt received the report.

The grand jury declared that in the discharge of its duties, members found that a great many of the cases upon which they deliberated were the outgrowth of illicit and uncontrollable traffic in intoxicating liquor resulting from the prohibition law. The jury reported:

"We feel that this law should be repealed and some practicable system of control should be substituted."

LIONS' STATE MEET OPENS

Pennsylvania Lions' Clubs will open a three-day convention this evening at the Penn Lincoln Hotel, Wilkinsburg.

A musical program at the hotel will feature this evening's program. A luncheon tomorrow, at which Dr. John W. Oliver will be principal speaker, will be followed by business sessions. A dinner for retiring and incoming officers in the ball room of the hotel and an entertainment in the Wilkinsburg High School conclude the first day's session.

The Rev. Dr. Robert MacGowan of the Pittsburgh Lions Club will speak at the banquet in the High School Tuesday evening. Burt Mustin, of Pittsburgh, will be toastmaster.

The convention will end Tuesday night with a dance in the hotel.

MRS. HOOVER GIVEN DEGREE

WOOSTER, O., May 14.—(AP.)—Mrs. Herbert Hoover today donned a black academic robe and a gold-tasseled mortar board to receive the honorary degree of doctor of [illegible] humanity.

The degree was conferred upon her by Wooster College as a "typical American wife and mother" in a ceremony held as part of Wooster's celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of its origin.

Despite the solemn dress and formality of the occasion, Mrs. Hoover was amused and pleased as a college girl. Dr. Charles F. Wishart, president of Wooster College, conferred the degree, and then Mrs. Hoover signed the official graduate roster. It was the seventh honorary degree the nation's First Lady has received.

The [illegible] Mrs. Hoover to the city her great-grandfather, William Henry, [illegible] laid out 125 years ago. The first surveying of Wooster, then known as the New Purchase, was among the scenes depicted in a spectacular pageant this afternoon in which 1,000 persons participated. Mrs. Hoover also placed a wreath on the grave of her great-grandfather and his son William Henry, both of whom are buried here.

DISBARMENTS TO BE PUSHED

John G. Frazer, president of the Bar Association, has been out of the city and said yesterday he would appoint committees early this week to make the investigations ordered more than a week ago.

The special committee headed by Attorney G. Tore Wright, the partial report of which brought the court order for disbarment proceedings, is continuing its investigation.

Pennsylvania Delegates Swinging Toward Garner

State Delegation May Finally Vote For Texan.

Aides of Pinchot Playing Inept Politics.

By MARK SHIELDS

Mr Shields

JOHN NANCE GARNER

Beneath the surface [illegible] ting elements in the Democratic Party in Pennsylvania [illegible] consider [illegible] John [illegible] Texas [illegible]

The Roosevelt forces [illegible] man [illegible] opinion [illegible] does not support [illegible]

The Baker sentiment [illegible] background of the [illegible] movement in Pennsylvania [illegible] the Smith supporters [illegible] the 1928 [illegible] more as a leader than as [illegible] may [illegible] again [illegible] They [illegible] and the belief spread [illegible] leadership [illegible] former Secretary of [illegible]

Swing to Texan Seen

But should Baker and Roosevelt be stopped as the balloting proceeds in Chicago a [illegible] must be sought [illegible] Pennsylvania there [illegible] discussion of Garner [illegible] man [illegible] ments. State Chairman [illegible] lins [illegible] the Smith campaign [illegible] hely-stated position [illegible] he does not wish [illegible] self to any [illegible] uninstructed delegation [illegible] this Garner sentiment [illegible] foresee a swing [illegible] Texan should the first choice of Pennsylvania kill each other off.

Collins of course is not talking Garner in terms of delegates [illegible] Neither are Joseph F. Guffey of Pittsburgh or Warren Van Dyke of Harrisburg, managers of the Roosevelt movement and militantly confident that their man will win. They are so assured that they do not even discuss alternatives, which is the course in politics always followed by the backers of any champion.

But from other sources I learn that there are a few delegates giving the Garner movement serious thought, especially since he mopped up both Roosevelt and Smith in California. At least eight in Pennsylvania have Texas Jack [illegible] in the back of their minds as a second choice when and if their original desires are unsatisfied.

Four of these delegates are from Philadelphia, two are from Greene County, one is from Erie and the other is from the Adams-York sector. In addition there are two reported from Pittsburgh who would look pleasantly upon the Speaker during a [illegible] break-up from other candidates.

State Expense Cut

In the inevitable [illegible] toward the curtailment of state expenditures including hospitals [illegible] assistance and state [illegible] sities, the Talbot [illegible] the vehicle of explanation [illegible] holding that measure [illegible] the special session of the Legislature last year passed [illegible] appropriate $10,000,000 for [illegible] the Supreme Court said:

"The act itself effected a repeal of so much of other appropriations not in its class as would be necessary to make good this express mandate of the Legislature."

No [illegible] the Talbot bill. [illegible] held by administration [illegible] that appropriations [illegible] agencies [illegible] bot money being [illegible] state finances. [illegible] 000,000 to the $[illegible] 000,000 deficit in receipts for the [illegible] estimated by Dr. Clyde King, secretary of revenue, [illegible] 000,000 at least [illegible] This is aside from [illegible] in the Highway Department where receipts from gasoline and motor license taxes will fall [illegible] 000,000 below anticipations [illegible] the Pinchot budget of [illegible]

Mr. Pinchot and his aides disclaim any responsibility for the cuts to be made. They [illegible] the burden rests upon the fiscal officers to follow out the mandate of the Supreme Court [illegible] make allocations [illegible] expected revenues.

Curtailment Vital

The big point, however, is that curtailment is necessary [illegible] the administration [illegible] that the budget must be balanced. If the administration [illegible] wishes it can save some of the money for hospitals and mothers' assistance by reducing the costs of government.

So far as that is concerned [illegible] can State Treasurer Edward Martin and Auditor General Charles Waters, whose costs have grown while their duties have been lessened.

The expenses of government in Pennsylvania have grown out of all proportion to the services rendered. For much of this the Leg- [illegible] Mr. Pinchot [illegible]

Chaos in Capital

This is [illegible] the same Capitol [illegible] the [illegible] administration inept and [illegible] but Mr. Pinchot has attempted to play politics in his game and the result has been chaos. Even in [illegible] there are some cabinet members, with the idea of service fundamental in their conception of public duty, who are not happy in their positions and who would resign now if they could without a breach of loyalty to the man they admire and whose principles and idealism they also believe [illegible] fundamentally sound.

Most of [illegible] were outraged when an assessment of 2 per cent was put on state employes [illegible] This [illegible] the latest assessment [illegible] about the Capitol to make each state employe give up one day's pay a month for welfare work.

Exemption Cut Seen

The latest assessment is classified as a spontaneous movement by the employes. Yet it seems to have originated from a central point and the active managers are chief subordinates of a few departments. Mr. Pinchot has approved the plan but it has not yet been made effective because flaws were found in the machinery.

Employes contributing to this fund can designate the agency they wish aided provided $40,000 is set aside for the Harrisburg Welfare Fund and $1,000 a month is allocated to state institutions.

Two theories are advanced to explain this latest assessment plan. One is that it will be used as argument to avert a salary cut when the next Legislature meets. The other is that the administration's contribution to the unemployment emergency and a means of avoiding an extra session.

Whatever the truth, the administration is [illegible] toward an extra session. And if there is such a session there are intimations now that its purpose will be [illegible] a deficit on present appropriations and not to meet the demands created by the growing population of unemployed [illegible] by figures of the Department of Labor and Industry.

[illegible] State Treasurer Martin fear [illegible] any increased taxes or new taxes. They refuse to accept the [illegible] of some hard-headed persons associated with the state government that debts might be [illegible] in the emergency to be [illegible]

It was pointed out to me this week in Harrisburg by one sound [illegible] on state problems that Pennsylvania is one of the few states which has [illegible] extent [illegible] the highway bonds to be [illegible] motor taxes. He was not fearful of [illegible] a debt for the emergency and observed that it was unnecessary that within [illegible] those suffering decreased incomes should be expected to meet the crisis.

[illegible] of optimism. The [illegible] by Mr. [illegible] Gleason of Cambria County, the [illegible] in that delightful [illegible] A vacancy [illegible] the Public Service Commission in [illegible] of this year. Mr. Gleason hopes to fill it and is [illegible] in the last primary.

MENU BUDGET OVERDRAWN BY TECH TESTERS

Penny Saved on Week-Day Meals Spent by Co-Eds For Today's Veal Dinner.

Exceeding their day's allotment by 1 cent, the five Carnegie Tech "economy" menu experimenters today were to have a stuffed veal heart Sunday dinner with all the trimmings.

In spite of the penny increase over the daily budget of $1 for all five of the girls they will still be under their budget to the extent of nearly 10 cents for the past week because of previous savings in weekday menus.

For breakfast today the girls were to have cinnamon cake. This is their recipe: One and one-fourth cup flour, ½ cup sugar, 1 tablespoon butter, 1 teaspoon baking powder, ½ cup milk and ¼ teaspoon salt. To make it mix flour, sugar, baking powder and salt. Add milk and melted butter. Place in a pan and sprinkle top with mixture of ¼ cup sugar and 1 teaspoon of cinnamon and dot with 2 tablespoons of butter. Bake in a moderate oven.

Today's menu follows:

BREAKFAST

Stewed apricots, cinnamon cake and hot cocoa.

DINNER

Stuffed veal hearts (potatoes, onions and bread crumbs), creamed turnips, raw carrots and raisin salad, graham bread, butter, blanc mange with fresh strawberry sauce, milk and coffee.

SUPPER

Potato and egg salad, slice of tomato, graham bread, butter, milk and tea.

TOKIO WILDLY HAILS CHAPLIN

TOKIO, May 14.—(AP)—Hundreds of thousands of Japanese movie fans yelled themselves hoarse today shouting "banzais" of welcome to Charlie Chaplin, who arrived from Singapore.

Chaplin, with his brother, Sydney, landed at Kobe on the steamer Terukuni Maru. There were 20,000 people on the docks to greet them, some of whom had waited for hours to hold their places.

Two hundred reporters and cameramen boarded ship while the crowds shouted on shore. After a short motor trip through the city the Chaplins boarded a train to come here. In preparation for their coming police officials assigned 300 patrolmen to duty at the railroad station to handle the tremendous crowd.

Afternoon newspapers here, including the staid Asahi and Nichi Nichi, joined in the hysterical welcome, devoting half their first pages to the story and printing pictures which had been sent from Kobe by telephoto.

The newspaper display exceeded anything in recent months, including the news of the greatest battles at Shanghai.

Kline and Succop Face Prison as Jury Convicts Them of Failing Trust

YEAR IN JAIL ON EACH GUILTY COUNT PENALTY

Jury Deliberates for 22 Hours at Butler; Woman Stands Firm for Acquittal.

[illegible] city [illegible] $300 [illegible]

[illegible]

Park [illegible] expressed [illegible]

"I'm satisfied."

GUILTY IN TRUCK DEAL

The count on which the Mayor was convicted was the [illegible] joint indictment. In this he and Succop were charged with lending $4,000 to one Henry Braun as an advance payment for [illegible] second-hand trucks Braun had sold [illegible].

In other words they were accused of paying Braun before the trucks were delivered.

Surprise was caused by the jury's action in convicting the Mayor on this count and acquitting him on the fourth count which charges that the same trucks were bought without advertising for bids.

Defense attorneys pointed out that no testimony had been introduced to show that the Mayor knew Braun had been paid in advance.

[illegible] for [illegible]

"The fifth count is highly inconsistent from the standpoint that the jury found the Mayor not guilty on the fourth count. Furthermore the purchase of these trucks was authorized by City Council."

FINLETTER GRANTS TIME

After hearing other remarks Judge Finletter announced:

"This thing is too important to be passed over hurriedly. When you are ready to debate the matter intelligently we will argue on it.

"I particularly want to hear the argument on the fifth count on which Mayor Kline was convicted."

The Judge then decided that formal argument on the motions would be held later at a place satisfactory to both sides.

A statement was issued later by the defense counsel, which contends that the verdict of guilty as it applies to Mayor Kline on the fifth count of the joint indictment was manifestly a [illegible] confusion in the jury's minds. It concludes:

"Counsel for the Mayor are convinced that this verdict of guilty on the single count cannot stand in law, and upon mature deliberation by the court will be set aside, thereby rendering the Mayor's vindication on all the charges in all the indictments complete and final, and with that in mind have filed a motion asking the court to set aside the conviction on said count."

District Attorney Park immediately departed on a week-end fishing trip to French Creek.

Special Prosecutor Earl F. Reed, hired by the Citizens Committee of Pittsburgh, was not in court for the verdict. In Pittsburgh Reed [illegible] the verdict:

"I'm satisfied."

It was Reed who handled much of the state's [illegible]

Col. E. L. Kearns, [illegible] Succop, had nothing [illegible]

On the three indictments [illegible] against the Mayor [illegible] individual count against [illegible] both were acquitted.

RUGS INVOLVED

Two of these three [illegible] the Mayor's case had [illegible] purchase of the famed [illegible] which he installed in his office in the City-County Building. The state charged he had bought these orientals from the Joseph Horne Company—the total price exceeding $2,000—without advertising for bids as the law requires for contracts over $500.

The jury of eight men and four women, all residents of Butler County, forgot to act on the one individual count against Succop and after the rest of the verdict was announced was sent back to deliberate further. It took just a few minutes to acquit. This count charged that Succop had knowingly given the [illegible] Company city food contracts after this company had been removed from the city's list of approved dealers for six months.

Since 6 p. m. eastern standard time Thursday the jury had had the case. It reached a verdict at 2:10 Saturday morning, sealed the findings and went to bed.

WOMAN FOR ACQUITTAL

One of the jurors, Mrs. Nellie Heineman, attractive [illegible] of the Mayor of Butler, had put up a long and at times single-handed fight for acquittal of the Mayor on all charges.

A half hour after the verdict she stood in the lobby of the Nixon Hotel, [illegible]. She said:

"There were times when I was so tired I thought I was dying. But it was a wonderful experience. Most of the time we seemed to be arguing about that fifth count in the Mayor's case."

Juror William McAlpine, salesman, said that more than [illegible] ballots were taken, some written, some oral. He estimated that at least 10 of these were on the fatal fifth count. From the first the vote was 11 to 1 for conviction. Finally Mrs. Heineman capitulated, but there were reports that if she changed her judgment on [illegible] the count she [illegible] whether the jury in other instances.

FOREMAN SATISFIED

Harry W. Bauer, [illegible] foreman of the jury, said:

"I don't see how the verdict could be any different."

The courtroom had no more than 50 spectators when the jury filed in at 9 a. m. with the sealed envelope. Among the Mayor's well-wishers there were his brother-in-law, Dr. Johnston; W. H. Monaghan, superintendent of the city garage and defense witness, and Police Supt. Peter P. Walsh, for whose purchase of a Packard auto the Mayor had been indicted.

Judge Finletter slit the envelope, read the verdict and took possibly two minutes to digest its contents. His serious mien belied the good-humored smile he exhibited often during the trial.

Col. Succop moved slightly in his chair. District Attorney Park leaned forward expectantly. Attorney Edward G. Coll, one of the Mayor's lawyers, standing beneath the bench, had turned towards the judge and turned a quizzical countenance in the court's direction.

CRIER READS VERDICT

Then Crier Frank M. Campbell read the [illegible] counts—reeled them off so rapidly that not for [illegible] were the attorneys [illegible] how many counts Succop had been convicted.

Twenty-[illegible] of these counts charged Succop with fostering a deceptive bidding system by which he gave meat contracts for the city hospitals to the A. L. Brahm Company, described as not the lowest responsible bidder.

In these counts the state charged that trick bids of 1 cent a pound were entered for meats which were not purchased by the city—these low offers designed to bring down the general average of the bid. The state's contention was that the favored bidders knew in advance which meats would not be bought [illegible] low on those.

GUILTY COUNTS

Count No. 1 accused Succop of giving a $14,000 contract for furniture for Mayview to C. A. Pulfer[illegible] and James B. Sansom, partners in the Puffinburg Company, which the state contended was not low bidder.

Count 5 was that on which the Mayor also was convicted. The Brahm meat counts ran from 7 to [illegible]. Counts 31 and 33 charged Succop with letting to the L. H. Parke Company contracts for canned foods totaling more than $20,000 without inviting bids.

Count 34 accused the former Supplies Director with not recognizing the lowest responsible bidder in the award of contracts to Glick Auto Supply Company, Penn Tire Company and Popular Supply Company.

On all these counts, with the exception of the fifth, the Mayor was acquitted.

PRAISES JURORS

In discharging the jurors Judge Finletter told them:

"Ladies and gentlemen, your devious task is done. I cannot see you go without sympathizing with you for your hardships. The prolonged study and anxious care you have given this case in the jury room is worthy of praise."

Before he sent them behind locked doors Judge Finletter instructed the jurors that the alleged violations in the distribution of city contracts were not criminal unless evil intent was shown.

In the closing hours of the trial no notice was taken of the case of the Luzerne County Commissioners, who were recently removed from office, fined $100 and sentenced to a year in jail for awarding a contract for more than $300 without competitive bids. The case was mentioned as a parallel early in the trial by Attorney W. D. Stewart in arguing for the prosecution, but Judge Finletter took no official notice of the reference.

Mayor Kline remained secluded in his suite in the Nixon two hours after the verdict had been brought in. Col. Succop was preparing to leave for his home on the South Side of Pittsburgh. The Mayor had let it be known before the verdict that he would be at his office Monday. Judge Finletter was speeding to Pittsburgh shortly after the verdict was opened. He planned to return tonight to Philadelphia, from where he was ordered by the Supreme Court, which granted Kline and Succop a change of venue to Butler County.

Kline's Majority Bar To Impeachment Move, Says John D. Houston

John D. Houston, wholesale grocer, whose letter of complaint to Council more than a year ago started the investigation of the City Supplies Department which led to yesterday's conviction of Mayor Kline and former Supplies Director Succop, declared himself well pleased with the verdict. He said:

"The verdict at Butler was a great moral victory for the people of Pittsburgh. It should have a salutary effect on the conduct of city business for many years.

"I believe the defense has no complaint. The court seemed to give it the benefit of every doubt.

"The action of the court on the motions for setting aside the verdict and a new trial remains to be seen.

"Meanwhile, of course, the Mayor will continue to sit, unless he voluntarily resigns.

"Long ago I gave consideration to possible impeachment proceedings against the Mayor, but I found that he had a decisive majority in Council, six of the nine members, I believe.

"If I am not mistaken six votes of Council would be necessary to carry through successful impeachment proceedings. In view of the fact that the Mayor's majority refused to permit a public investigation of my charges of favoritism in the letting of city contracts, I feel there would be little use attempting to oust the Mayor by such a method."

Houston complained that the L. H. Parks Company of Philadelphia, though not the low bidder, was receiving contracts for canned goods over Pittsburgh firms. The Mayor conducted a secret investigation, discharged Succop for "visible irregularities" and then was indicted with Succop after a grand jury investigation.

CLEAR PRIEST IN JURY 'FIX'

BUTLER, Pa., May 14.—The Rev. Francis Clifford, of Cumminsville, one of eight persons indicted on embracery charges as a result of alleged attempts to "fix" the original jury panel in the Kline-Succop case, was cleared today when the court quashed the charge against him.

District Attorney E. H. Negley, of Butler County, said Clifford would testify for the commonwealth at the trial of the other defendants.

G. O. P. LEADERS MAY ASK KLINE TO QUIT OFFICE

Several Politicians Hint Mayor Should Give Up Duties Pending Appeal.

By MARK SHIELDS
Staff Correspondent

PHILADELPHIA, May 14.—A move is under way among certain Pittsburgh politicians here for the Republican State Committee meeting today to have Mayor Charles H. Kline turn over the duties of his office to City Council President John S. Herron until the appeal of the Mayor's conviction for malfeasance in office is settled.

Advocates of the plan declined to give it public indorsement for the present.

Some comments on the Mayor's conviction follow.

State Senator James J. Coyne said:

"I am very sorry to hear the verdict against the Mayor. That is all I can say."

After Kline was indicted, Coyne told him:

"They'll acquit you without leaving the box."

Council President Herron said:

"I am very sorry to hear of the verdict against Mayor Kline and Director Succop. I regret the decision, and had looked for nothing of the kind."

Councilman Harry A. Little said:

"This verdict, I can assure you, was entirely unexpected. I am very, very sorry to hear this bad news."

Third Party Issue Speeches Tomorrow

Williams, executive secretary of the League for Independent Political Action, will discuss "A New Party—Why and How?" at the open forum of the League of Social Justice tomorrow night in the Y. ## Congress Speeds Added $500,000 To Save 'Record'

WASHINGTON, May 14.—(INS)—Talk may be cheap some places, but not in Congress.

The House today was forced to send to the Senate a resolution authorizing $500,000 more for printing. The public printer informed the House the Congressional Record would go out of business May 16 unless he got more money.

The long session, many committee hearings and extended debates have all contributed to increase printing costs.

Within one minute the Senate received, considered, read three times and enacted the House bill making the $500,000 available for the printing office.

Clairton Boy Burned By Gasoline, Dies

MAYVIEW GETS HIGH RATING

A survey of inspection of the City Home and Hospital at Mayview by the State Department of Welfare gives the institution one of the highest ratings in the state, a letter to Mrs. Enoch Rauh, director of Public Welfare for Pittsburgh, from Alice F. Liveright, state director, disclosed today.

The inspection was made by Mrs. Dora B. Porter, field representative of the State Welfare Department.

The department, however, recommended that steps be taken soon to provide more space for "loafing room" for the patients and inmates. The large population at Mayview—which has increased tremendously during the past two years—has caused the crowded conditions, according to Mrs. Porter, necessitating the using of a large part of the "loafing" space for dormitories.

Farmer Indicted In Wife's Slaying

MILLERSBURG, O., May 14.—(AP)—A first degree murder indictment was returned today against Herbert Mecker, 27, Wayne County farmer, in connection with the slaying of his young wife, Orpha, several days ago.

Mrs. Mecker's nude body was found in a creek near here several days ago. Mecker later confessed he was present when she was slain by blows on the head allegedly inflicted by a distant relative, Harold Young, 19.

When officers went to arrest Young, he committed suicide with a shotgun.

The only motive assigned for the murder was that Mecker's wife was "not welcome" when she returned home after a separation of several months.

COUNTY POLICE PLANS HIT SNAG

Plans for the reorganization of Allegheny County's police force under Director of Property and Supplies Ray Sprigle have run into what mariners call "shoal water."

At a salary board meeting Friday, called especially to provide funds for the police force, Commissioner W. D. Mansfield told his two colleagues that he would not vote for anything concerning personnel and wanted to rescind the action Wednesday whereby the Commissioners named W. F. Rucker, former deputy warden of Western Penitentiary, chief of the new force. No action was taken on personnel.

On Commissioner Charles C. McGovern's motion the salary set up was changed, the chief to get $3,000 a year instead of $3,600, three sergeants to get $2,100 a year instead of $2,400, six patrolmen to get $170 a month and six others $150 a month. The present force will end its service today and unless the new personnel is named at once there just won't be any county police tomorrow.

City Dog Licenses Showing Decrease

Dog licenses issued by the City Treasurer's office for the first four months of 1932 showed a decrease of $772.10 over the same period of last year, Treasurer Richard W. Thomson's report made public yesterday disclosed. Receipts for the first four months of 1932 were $13,565, against $14,337.10 for 1931.

Monthly receipts for 1931 were: January, $6,761; February, $2,639; March, $1,782, and April, $3,155.10. Monthly receipts for the current year were: January, $4,516; February, $4,748; March, $2,743, and April, $2,828.

Growing Roll of Jobless Stresses Need for Bonds

NEW YORK, May 14.—(Universal)—Increases in unemployment reported from many parts of the United States during the past week served to emphasize the need for passage by Congress of the $5,000,000,000 prosperity loan for public works advocated by William Randolph Hearst.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, estimates there are 7,950,000 workers now idle.

State Industrial Commissioner Frances Perkins reported during the week that factory payrolls in New York had decreased 6.7 per cent during April and factory unemployment 3.6 per cent. According to Miss Perkins, the drop in employment in April was the largest since 1914.

The State Department of Labor estimates there are about 1,250,000 persons out of work in the state of New York. In New York City the number is estimated at 750,000.

Unemployment figures received from other parts of the country give the number of idle in Chicago at 700,000; Detroit, 400,000; Los Angeles, 174,000; Seattle, 150,000; Milwaukee, 135,000; Boston, 100,000; Baltimore, 58,000; Atlanta, 50,000; Washington, 20,000.

MOTOR CORPS RETAINED HERE BY RED CROSS

Increased Relief Demands
From Seven City Agencies
Necessitate Continuation.

Increased relief demands from seven [illegible] agencies in Allegheny County since the first of the year, in a majority of the cases as great as 100 per cent, necessitate the continuation of the Pittsburgh Chapter Red Cross Motor Corps, it was announced at a meeting of the organization yesterday at the Edgeworth Club.

Organized as an emergency measure in January to provide transportation for welfare case workers investigating requests for aid, the group decided yesterday to continue its work just as long as their services are required, Miss Mary B. Burchfield, chairman of the motor group, announced.

DEMAND MOUNTS

More than 100 women were present at yesterday's meeting and the tea which followed as guests of Mrs. George Phelps Rose, member of the executive committee of the Red Cross and vice chairman of the volunteer services committee.

The number of families receiving aid from the agencies served by the motor corps has increased since January from 26,000 to 47,000, according to Mrs. Benno Janssen, vice chairman of the group. The 160 registered driver-members of the corps have made 1,[illegible] calls during this period, she said.

AGENCIES LISTED

Agencies with which the motor corps is cooperating are Family Welfare Association, Improvement of the Poor, Catholic Charities, Jewish Welfare, Lutheran Inner Mission, Red Cross and the Milk and Ice Fund.

Other officers of the Red Cross present at the meeting included Mrs. A. I. Humphrey, member of the executive committee of the Pittsburgh Chapter and chairman of the volunteer services, and Mrs. F. S. Reed, executive secretary.

SCHOOLS HELP FAMILY DRIVE

One hundred and sixty-nine additional families, bringing the total to 5,508, will be cared for through the Family-Help-Family fund as a result of additional contributions since report meetings ceased.

A large part of the money added came from schools, clubs and churches.

Several benefits have been planned to raise additional funds.

COURT ORDERS JOBS RESTORED TO CITY HELP

Civil Service Commission
Upheld in Reinstatement
Of Two Fired by Dunlap.

Power of the City Civil Service Commission was upheld and the inability of city officials to remove civil service appointees from office affirmed in an opinion handed down by Judge Frank P. Patterson in Common Pleas Court yesterday.

Judge Patterson issued a writ of peremptory mandamus against Director of Supplies ordering that Bert M. Doty and Mathilda Ganley, dismissed clerks in the Department of Supplies, be returned immediately to work with the same classification and at the same pay they were receiving January 1, when they were let go in a city economy move.

TO GET BACK PAY

Doty will receive $900 back pay and Miss Ganley $497.25 for the time of their enforced absence.

Judge Patterson, in his opinion, said:

"If we are to take away the control of reinstatement from the Commission, its existence is a vain and futile thing. The policy of the law is to sustain any effort to foster and promote control of public employes by a merit system, as opposed to ulterior influences. Every municipal election is a tragic example of the results that inevitably follow in those departments of government which have been exempted from civil service and appointment, promotion, reduction, reinstatement and removal committed to the fancy, prejudices and political aspirations of the department head or his superior.

INTENT OF ACT

"The Civil Service Act of 1907 was intended to create an efficient personnel for employment in the various departments of the municipal government in second class cities by means of qualifying examinations in the several classifications of service and to protect the employe who had qualified and had been employed from any result of favoritism, political preferment, religious prejudice or other unjust consideration."

Doty and Miss Ganley were dropped by Director Dunlap despite the fact there were six employes in the office on a provisional or non-civil service basis. They obtained an order for reinstatement from the Civil Service Commission, which Dunlap did not heed, and appealed to court for the writ of mandamus.

FIRST BALLOT FAILS TO ELECT M. E. BISHOP

Dr. Day, of Pittsburgh, Trailing 2 Leaders, Shows Strong in Large Field.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 14. (AP)—The Rev. Dr. Albert E. Day, of Christ Church, Pittsburgh, received 92 votes on the first ballot today as the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church voted on two new bishops.

The Rev. Dr. Lewis O. Hartman, Boston, and the Rev. Dr. Joseph H. M. Gray, Detroit, received the two highest votes respectively, but none of the hundred candidates' returns equaled the necessary two-third vote. After the results of the first ballot were announced, the second ballot was cast and sealed for tabulation Monday.

Meanwhile, the conference had enacted legislation reducing Episcopal pensions approximately 50 per cent in a compromise on a proposal to circumscribe the privileges of a retired bishop by returning him to his annual conference in the same status as a minister and at a minister's pension. The new regulation does not apply to the present board of bishops.

The conference also passed a resolution of sympathy to Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh after the crowded assembly hall had stood with bowed heads while Bishop Anderson, of Boston, invoked divine help for the bereaved parents.

The conference was asked to approve a request to the President for a commission to study and outline a plan to cope with economic conditions.

The resolution, referred to committee, suggested modification of anti-trust laws, permission for industry to organize, Congress to regulate hours and wages, and a commission on industrial organization and labor.

WOMEN READY FOR DRY REPEAL CAMPAIGN HERE

Tag Days, Radio Talks, Auto Crusade to Mark Member Drive Opening Tomorrow.

Pittsburgh women voters will launch their first public drive against prohibition laws tomorrow when the local chapter of the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform opens "Repeal Week" as part of a national program.

Mrs. Dilworth

Four tag days, radio appeals and a general membership drive mark the local participation. Prominent society and club women will conduct the canvass under the general chairmanship of Mrs. Joseph Dilworth with Mrs. G. Faber Downey, Jr., as vice chairman.

Temporary headquarters will be opened at 227 Fifth avenue where leaders will direct activities of three cruising automobiles. Tag solicitors will canvass principal street corners downtown, and in Oakland, East Liberty, Wilkinsburg and North Side. The squad cars will speed the canvassers around the various districts.

Five radio appeals already have been arranged.

Under the slogan "A Nickel for Repeal," funds collected through tag contribution, button and auto plate sales will be used to carry the membership campaign througout Western Pennsylvania. All women voters are eligible to membership. There are no dues, the members pledging support to the fight for dry law repeal.

'Army' to Celebrate 6 Birthdays Monday

Children of the Salvation Army's day nursery, 25 Fernando street, will have a collective birthday party tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. The event will serve to celebrate the birthdays of six children.

Birthdays have been accumulating so rapidly lately, Adjt. Lucy Melzer, director, decided it was advisable to hold a party now and another later. About 25 children are at the nursery.

Overtaxing capacity at the nursery and emergency home represents a big problem which the Army hopes to solve in connection with its drive for $112,500.

Television Exhibit To Open on Tuesday

Latest developments in television will be exhibited and described by experts beginning Tuesday in Rosenbaum's Store. A group of Pittsburgh radio stars will broadcast from the second floor of the store and their images will be cast upon a screen in the Television Theater, eleventh floor.

The exhibit, sponsored by the store, will be continued through the week, with announcers and talent from Pittsburgh's five stations and from the National Broadcasting Company taking part in the visible broadcasts.

NOW LOSE FAT A POUND A DAY ON A FULL STOMACH

YOU LOOK WONDERFUL. WHAT HAVE YOU BEEN DOING TO GET THIN SO FAST? STARVING YOURSELF? I HARDLY KNOW YOU
NO! I'M ACTUALLY EATING MORE THAN EVER—YET I'VE LOST AS MUCH AS 5 POUNDS IN A WEEK—AND TAKEN OFF INCHES OF FAT

Do Just These Two Simple Things—Fat Melts Away

Science has made important discoveries in fat reduction. The average fat person can now rip off fat a pound a day—four to seven pounds every week! — on a full stomach, with never a hungry moment. Thus it is foolish now to stay fat.

This is what you do: Take a teaspoonful ordinary Jad Salts in a glass of water a half hour before breakfast every morning. This reduces moisture-weight instantly. Also cleanses the system of the waste matter and excess toxins that most fat people have, and banishes puffiness and bloat.

Then do this about eating. FILL YOUR STOMACH—eat your fill—of lean meats, vegetables like spinach, cauliflower, cabbage, tomatoes, etc., and lots of salads. Eat a lot. Eat all you can hold. Don't go hungry a minute! Cut down on fats, sweets, desserts and bread. Eat any fruit for dessert.

That's all you do. Fat seems to melt away. The coarse lines of overweight give way to the refined ones of slenderness. You lose as much as a pound a day. You feel better than for years. For in this treatment you achieve two important results. The Jad Salts clear your system of toxins. *The diet takes off fat with food that turns into energy instead of weight.

If you're tired of being embarrassed by fat, try this way. You'll be glad that you did. You can get Jad Salts at any drug store.

*Note particularly—Jad Salts is urged purely as a poison-banishing agent—not as a reducing. The change in food does the work.

"The fingerprints of William Allen were taken today and his record is being investigated. This is done with the idea that his entrance in the woods at the spot designated may have been more than mere coincidence and while no suspicion rests upon him every possible angle in the case is being investigated.

ROSNER HAD NOTE

"The written statement of Morris Rosner has been completed. In substance it is to the effect that he did everything possible to co-operate with the Lindbergh family and endeavored to obtain whatever information he could through underworld sources as to the possible whereabouts of the child.

"This statement includes the fact that he took one of the ransom notes to New York City and the names of all persons to which he showed it have been designated.

"Rosner is leaving for New York tonight and is not under arrest or surveillance of in custody."

SACK IS NEW CLUE

Meanwhile a new [illegible] announced—a dirty burlap sack.

It was picked up about [illegible] from the improvised grave [illegible] miles from the Lindbergh home where the infant's battered body was discovered.

It was taken carefully to police headquarters to be examined in the hope it might in some way throw more light on the tragic case.

One theory was that the child might have been killed somewhere else and the body transported in the bag to the heavily wooded section where it was found.

If traces of blood are found on the sack, this theory might gain weight.

NICKNAMES KNOWN

Hope of finding some other clue led officials to have all leaves, twigs and surface dirt from a large radius around where the body was found scraped up and taken to the Lindbergh estate. When the collection [illegible] chemists will analyze and study [illegible]

Curtis remained on the Lindbergh estate to aid in every means possible in the hunt for the men he had believed were the kidnapers.

Most of Thursday [illegible] he spent telling officials the [illegible] story of his negotiations. Yesterday he was taken over part of the ground he covered during his work in Col. Lindbergh's behalf.

Col. Schwarzkopf told of passing on to the Coast Guard part of the story, the nicknames of the five men, the description and a description of their boat. He said:

"At no time was anything given to Mr. Curtis to deliver or show to Col. Lindbergh and no demands were made upon him by any of the alleged group of kidnapers with whom he was in contact as to any additional ransom."

It had been reported [illegible] that this gang furnished the Virginian with a picture purporting to have been taken of the Lindbergh baby while he was their captive, and also to have demanded $200,000 for the baby's return.

Prosecutors of the county in which the body was found and the one in which the kidnaping occurred met at the death spot.

SEES LONG HUNT

Both were searching for something new, some fresh clue to aid them in the greatest job of their lives.

Later Prosecutor Erwin E. Marshall said he was working on a new clue but did not disclose how important he considered it or where it had been discovered. Marshall declared:

"It is apparent to me that we must settle down to a long grim fight to capture and to convict the man guilty of this heinous crime.

"The time is past for excuses for lack of action because of fear for the safety of the child.

"There did exist that condition. The hands of officials were tied. They in proper and true sympathy with the parents, desired the safe return of the child.

"But now we know he is dead.

"Now is the time for swift determined action."

Real Story of 'Jafsie' Moves in $50,000 Hoax Told for First Time

[illegible]

Dr. Condon first entered the [illegible] March 8 [illegible] go-between in the payment of $70,000 in ransom.

He [illegible] from the [illegible] safety pins with which the baby's blanket had been fastened to his crib.

When he met the kidnaper messenger for the first time on the night of March 12 in Woodlawn Cemetery he showed the man the two pins and asked him if he knew where they had come from. The man replied:

"Sure I do. They were used to pin the blanket to the crib."

The messenger, however, gave Dr. Condon reassurance that the child was actually held by the gang he represented and was alive and well. He said he would send the baby's sleeping garment as conclusive proof.

The sleeping suit arrived on March 16. Several hours later Col. Lindbergh visited the Condon home and identified the garment.

CHEAP BROWN PAPER

The suit received by Dr. Condon was wrapped in cheap brown paper and addressed to Mr. Doctor Condon. The [illegible] was penned in all the kidnapers' messages.

The note to Dr. Condon read:

"Mr. Lindberg will find ouer program in the enclosed letter. If you are willing you may confer with Mr. Lindberg about it."

The enclosure stated:

"Yes, sir. Ouer man faill to collect mony. There are no more meeting from March 12. Those confidential conferences after we arrangements to hazardous for us. We will not allow ouer man to confer in a way like befor. Circumstance will not allow us to make transfare like you wish. It is impossibly for us.

"Wy chuld we move the baby and face danger to take another person to plase is entirely out of question. It seems you are afraid if we are the right party and if the boy is alright because we probably have to pay well. You have ouer signature and always the same as the first one. Specially three 3 holes.

TOLD NOT TO WORRY

"Now we will send you the sleeping suit from the baby. Besides it means 3 $ extra expenses (probably meant buy) another one. Please tell Mrs. Lindberg note to worry the baby is well. We only have to give him more food as the diet says.

"You are willing to pay 70,000 note 50,000 $ without seeing the baby first or note. Let us know about that. We want another way because we don't like to give up. If you are willing to accept this deal, put those in the paper.

"'I accept. Money is ready.'

"Ouer program is: After 8 hours we have the money received we will notify yo wher the baby. If there is any ways (probably meant delay) you will be responsible for what will follow."

The identifying signature was drawn at the lower right hand corner of the paper.

Shortly after Condon began communicating with the swindlers through newspaper advertisements in which he signed himself "Jafsie," a new letter was received at the Condon home. It read:

"You know our program. We sent you the baby's sleeping suit. Did you give it to Mr. Lindbergh? We will not communicate with you any more and we will wait until you write us in the paper.

"This kidnaping case was prepared a year ago already so the police will have no look in searching for us and the baby. The baby is well. Tell Mr. Lindbergh his search for the baby will do no good."

Following receipt of this letter Dr. Condon inserted an advertisement acknowledging receipt of the sleeping garment and appealing to the kidnapers to understand his position.

REPLY AFTER DELAY

No response was received. Other ads were published and finally this one:

"Money is ready. Furnish simple code for us to use in paper—Jafsie."

A reply came. It was:

"There is no use to furnish you with a code. You know our program. There is no use to delay. If you don't give us the money by 8th of April we will add $30,000 and Mr. Lindbergh will have to pay $100,000, not $70,000.

"We will keep the baby in our save plase. Mr. Lindbergh is foolish to follow those false clues. He knows who is the right party and can tell by ouer signature which is the same on the first ransom note. Mr. Lindbergh does not have to worry about the baby. The child is safe."

The false clues apparently referred to the negotiations being carried on by others around Norfolk.

The letter was a plain ultimatum. There was no alternative. Dr. Condon urged payment as the only hope. Mrs. Lindbergh agreed with him. Col. Lindbergh agreed.

At Dr. Condon's home the father signed the following authorization:

"I hereby authorize Dr. John F. Condon to deliver the sum of $70,000 to whomsoever in his judgment he believes to be the kidnapers of my son."

And so it was agreed and done.

CONDON BARGAINS

When Dr. Condon met the emissary he told him:

"The reason why there was so much delay in obtaining the money is because Col. Lindbergh isn't as wealthy as he is supposed to be."

The emissary was nervous. His one thought was to get the money and then be off. He blurted out:

"All right. We'll be satisfied with $50,000."

Dr. Condon replied:

"I'll get the money for you right away. Wait."

He returned to the machine where Col. Lindbergh was waiting with $70,000 in a box. Twenty thousand was hurriedly removed. Dr. Condon returned to the cemetery with $50,000.

The man took the money and told Condon the baby would be found aboard the yacht Nellie off Martha's Vineyard.

A fruitless search followed. All hope [illegible] the while the baby was lying dead a few miles from Lindbergh's [illegible]

Davis Demands Beer, Wine But Delegation Dodges Mackrell's Repeal Plans

evasive. It procrastinates and puts off to another day something that should be done now. In Senator Davis' candidacy you had your answer from the people of the state on the twenty-sixth of April. The voters at that time gave their verdict. I ran as a candidate for delegate and I told my constituents that I was a wet candidate. I also was the manager of Senator Davis' campaign.

NATION WATCHES

"I was elected and I am trying in an orderly way to bring about a change. The eyes of the state and nation are on this meeting today. Watching what we do here. The spirit of your resolution may be fine but the time for such deliberations is past. We have to keep faith with the people back home and I ask you to vote down this resolution."

In [illegible] succession Charles Dorrance [illegible] of the wet Liberal party [illegible] tenant Governor in 1930, the Senator Samuel Salus [illegible] ant and member of the Philadelphia organization which demanded that Davis declare wet before it would support him [illegible] the Schertz resolution [illegible] porizing.

GETS NO SUPPORT

On a [illegible] there was [illegible] vote of Mackrell for [illegible] consideration of the prohibition resolution. Not a delegate from Allegheny County which gave the wet candidate Davis a [illegible] of 115,000 over the dry [illegible] Smedley Butler supported Mackrell.

"I'm doing this, not because I want to but because I think it for the best interest of the wet movement. In view of the statements which have been made by the two Senators from Pennsylvania there is little question of the attitude of this state on prohibition."

Delegates gathered [illegible] after the meeting [illegible] the action. Almost [illegible] they declared [illegible] that they wished to refrain from an official declaration [illegible] they reached Chicago. Some said they feared an expression on prohibition at this time from the leading Republican state might prove troublesome especially if they could not secure the incorporation of a repeal plank in the platform.

HOOVER CRACKS WHIP

It was evident that the Pennsylvanians while regarding themselves as leading Republicans lacked the courage to head the attack on prohibition. There was plainly heard the echo of a whip cracked by President Hoover under which all of the delegates but Mackrell bent their backs.

Senator David A. Reed, assumed to have brought to Philadelphia the wishes of the President and the Republican national committee, had two opportunities to express himself on prohibition, once when he spoke before the state committee and again when he nominated Vare for chairman of the delegation, but remained silent. On the other hand, Davis directly indorsed a bill for tax on beer, declaring:

"I would rather vote for a tax on beer in place of the proposed tax on admissions to places of amusements, which are the public's outlet for recreation."

He continued:

"I make bold to say that the time has arrived for the assertion of leadership which will retrieve from illegal channels that revenue which rightfully belongs to the Federal Treasury, and which, if recovered, would pay a large part, if not all, of the interest on the public debt. In this phase of the problem, Prof. Edwin R. A. Seligman, of Columbia University, said:

QUOTES ECONOMIST

"'If prohibition were not in force, the taxes on liquor would have rendered unnecessary not only miscellaneous taxes, but all other tax proposals of the secretary.'

"I could fortify this argument with innumerable quotations—more from statistical reports. But I believe that is not necessary. The record of diverted tax receipts is indelibly written into our national financial history. Although it cannot be erased, further loss of this revenue can and must be stopped.

"I would rather vote for a tax on beer, in place of the proposed tax on admissions to places of amusement, which are the public's outlet for recreation. It is impossible to make men good by legislation. One might as well attempt to make them wise. Under the present prohibition law the morale of the nations is subnormal and confidence in government shattered."

FLING AT HOOVER

Davis inferentially criticized President Hoover when he declared "we need no more fact finding commissions." He urged enactment of a federal relief plan for public works construction.

Reed was named the Pennsylvania member of the resolutions committee to frame a platform and other elections were:

Martin, vice chairman; Senator John J. McClure, Delaware, secretary; Charles Johnson, Montgomery, vice president of the convention, representing Pennsylvania; Senator M. G. Leslie, Allegheny, committee on rules; Mrs. Worthington, Scranton, Lackawanna, committee on credentials; recorder of deeds James M. Hazlett, Philadelphia, committee on permanent organization.

Vare, visibly suffering from illness, presided over the delegates' caucus with surprising energy, banging his gavel with a

THE APACHE'S RATTLESNAKE

CIVILIZATION'S RATTLESNAKE

The picture on the left shows an actual scene in the desert, long ago, the terrible torture invented by an Indian savage. The old prospector, caught and tied down by the Indians, is just beyond reach of the rattlesnake's fangs. The serpent, tied to a stone, believes that the man on the ground is tormenting him and struggles desperately for revenge.

Hurling his weight toward the helpless man's feet, the rattlesnake moves the stone a fraction of an inch, and in time will attain his object.

The modern serpent, of UNEMPLOYMENT, cold-blooded, remorseless, relentless, torments the white-collar man in the right-hand picture.

He lives and works in dread of that serpent, and, excepting for the heat of the desert sun, one torture is as painful as the other.

MANY men unfortunately will recognize themselves in the right-hand half of Mr. McCay's picture. Millions are out of work, their condition inexpressibly sad. Many more millions, still at work, carry in their hearts a heavy load of apprehension, anxiety for the future, fear of "losing the job."

The torture that old "supply and demand" inflicts upon them in these days of uncertainty is as cruel as that invented by the savage on the left.

The story of Apache torture was originally told by Mr. Hal Coffman.

Two interests dominate that Apache—first, fighting; then, torturing a conquered man and inventing NEW forms of torture.

The picture on the left shows one of the Apache inventions.

The old gold prospector, surprised and overpowered, is "staked out" as the picture shows. Next, the savage who has pinned a rattlesnake to the ground with a forked stick, making it helpless, attaches a stone, not too heavy, to the snake's tail just forward of the rattle, which ceaselessly vibrates. The snake struggles desperately, dragging himself and the stone that holds him captive forward, slowly. The Apache watches the tragedy that he has planned as long as it amuses him, then goes elsewhere.

After he has gone, the struggles continue. The rattlesnake continues his savage efforts, the helpless white man struggles desperately, hopelessly to escape from the ropes that hold him.

He is no more helpless than the white collar man on the right, a man with a family dependent upon him, grateful for work, constantly in dread of the fate that threatens.

The tragedies of the rattlesnake and the unemployment danger are in one way the same, inasmuch as in both pictures, the facts are soon forgotten.

Shortly after the Apache goes, the rattlesnake has forgotten all about the savage that held down his head and tied the stone to his tail. He sees and hates only the helpless old man that never hurt him.

Little by little, persistently, with vicious jumps and struggles, the snake draws closer to the man, his rage increasing with time and the pain of the string that is attached to it.

The man watches in horror as the snake comes closer, inch by inch, waiting in agony for the moment when it will be close enough to strike.

It may take hours for the snake to cover the distance that separates him from his victim. The hot sun beats down on the desert, alkali dust fills the man's eyes and throat. The snake continues its struggling, comes nearer and nearer.

By now man and snake have completely forgotten the Apache responsible for their troubles.

The snake hates the man and the man hates the snake with intense bitterness. In an hour the snake's poisonous fangs will be in the man's flesh. He will struggle and scream only to be bitten again and again. Each of the two, man and snake, sees in the other a deadly enemy, both forgetting the real enemy.

If you saw this scene in the desert you might say to the snake, "Why do you hate this man who has not hurt you? Why don't you wait for a chance to bite that savage?" And to the man filled with poisonous hate of the reptile you would say, "There is no use in hating this snake, for he is obeying the instincts that control him. The Apache who tied you up here is the one you should hate."

As the snake in the left-hand picture blames the man and longs for his death, so the man in the right-hand picture, when the blow falls, often directs his hatred in the wrong direction.

He blames the employer that lets him go, not realizing that the employer MUST do that which conditions force upon him.

Or he blames some vague thing which he calls "Big Business" for his trouble. All wasted and misdirected energy.

The man that has lost his millions and the man that has lost his job must go far back to 1914 to find the cause of their misery.

We are engaged now in paying for the big war that we entered so lightly, sending three millions of our men and many billions of our dollars.

Let the rich man suddenly made poor, or the faithful worker, who finds himself with no work to do, go back to the hatreds, jealousies of Europe, to find the source of their misfortune.

The lesson in both these pictures is the same, namely, that the human race as yet is not civilized.

The Apache that sets a rattlesnake to torment a helpless old man represents a lower form of savagery.

Our "intelligent" nations, brutally going to war, murdering each other millions at a time, killing each other with explosives and poisonous gases, inflicting poverty and misfortune upon the whole world for years afterward, represent what they are pleased to call "the higher civilization," which in reality is only a more complicated form of savagery.

There is little consolation for one who has dropped from wealth to poverty, or from safe and useful employment into idleness not deserved, in talk about "causes and responsibility."

Nevertheless, it is men's duty to try to understand conditions that control them and to know causes of their misfortune.

The nations of Europe deliberately set to work cutting each others' throats and kept it up for years. This nation that had hesitated about spending a third of a billion on the great Panama Canal, and had never spent the necessary money to protect women in childbirth, irrigate the deserts and dry up the swamps, instantly supplied ten billions of dollars to foreign nations that they might CONTINUE THEIR KILLING.

We sent three millions of our men over there and might have lost the majority of them had not our entrance into the war been providentially delayed.

We sent other tens of billions of dollars to Europe when the war was over, and are called "Shylock" and "dollar hungry" for our pains.

All sympathy is with both men in these pictures. The old prospector, looking for gold, trudging over deserts and mountains, did not see the savages trailing him and was not responsible for their viciously cruel natures. So the other man, who has faithfully done his work providing for those dependent upon him, attending to his duty and finding himself suddenly idle, with no work and no money, deserves national sympathy and what is more important, NATIONAL HELP.

But there should be no thought of hatred in his mind against a condition that is inevitable.

It is for Americans to improve their methods of government, if they have the brains to do it, and to begin by keeping out of Europe's wars and troubles.

Fortunately, evil conditions do not last forever. The Apaches that made life unsafe on the desert have been killed off.

They torture no longer.

And thanks to human intelligence, some day economic conditions, false industrial and financial methods that bring exaggerated prosperity at one time and undeserved misery at another, will also be abolished.

Civilization in U. S. Rejuvenates World's Old Races, Says Romier

Present Cycle Favors American Type Against European, Publicist Adds

By LUCIEN ROMIER,

Noted French Historian and Economist.

In His Book, "Who Will Be Master, Europe or America?"

THE EXISTENCE, side by side, upon a rather limited territory of extreme diversity, and yet, at the same time, of a certain general harmony, creates the veritable charm of European civilization.

Achievements of many different kinds suggest the variety of settings and the vigor of national or local genius. The sense of harmony is evoked always by the common heritage, the common imprint of the Roman spirit which is shown everywhere in the fact that religion, art, city or state government are established everywhere in a traditional and logical order.

THIS ARTICLE IS the third of a series from Lucien Romier's book, "Who Will Be Master, Europe or America?"

The author, a noted French historian and economist of the younger generation, made a tour of America, and embraces his observations in the book quoted from. He asks:

"Of all existing civilizations, which one possesses sufficient moral and physical vigor to adapt itself to mass-needs, in order to impose itself on the rest of the world?"

M. Romier's conclusion is that the "real issue is between Europe and America." He shows that America has outstripped Europe in some particulars and interprets the "social and economic originality of America," but finds that the issue as to the supremacy of Europe or America still remains in doubt.

Uniformity and discord, extending everywhere over a vast territory, are, however, the ruling qualities which strike the eye of the newcomer in the United States. For one thing, no particular or local genius is perceived, and for another, there is no sense of a traditional framework of order.

This astonishing contrast is by no means due to chance, nor does it result from any want of common bonds between Europe and America.

The Americans still have before their eyes the glittering relics of the harmonious and diversified civilization which Europe had planted upon their continent. It remains for them merely to venerate it or possibly to derive inspiration from it. [illegible] a hundred places.

American Spirit
Submergence of Politics Its Characteristic

What could be in better taste or harmony than the "Colonial" charm of old Salem? What evokes more nicely the genteel refinements of a bygone age than the Vieux Carré of New Orleans? And from the Gulf of Mexico to Northern California is scattered the loveliness, the grace, the elegance, of the Andalusian spirit.

Certain important facts in themselves are enough to indicate the originality, the spirit of modernity and independence which characterize the sphere of American civilization.

The first, which is we believe without equal or example in history, is that this enormous social organism, in which, under an iron-handed police, the most novel as well as the most traditional forms of human activity are carried on at amazing speed and on a colossal scale, has been built up as if at one stroke and without any serious attention to either political ideals or theories of civil administration.

The predominance of the economic and social factors over the political one in the development of the United States helps to separate her more than anything else from the European tradition. It is this difference that has determined everything. It is in accordance with this that the future will tell what the ultimate chances of America are.

Racial Traits
'Melting Pot' Theory Not Sustained

We do not believe that the United States is at all the famous melting-pot it has been said to be, and in which racial characteristics are completely fused.

On the contrary, there has hardly ever been a more striking demonstration of the permanence of racial character. One might go so far as to say that at the welcome hearth of this new home the attributes of each race become more sharply defined and as if stripped of all useless features.

An Italian, an Irishman, a Slav, a Languedocian, a transplanted German, are all more easily recognizable at Seattle or at Houston, at Milwaukee or at Los Angeles, than at Paris or Brussels. But the miracle of it all is that this diversity of race that is such a profound cause of discord in the older states of Europe, which seem to have lost their power of absorption or regeneration, in America on the contrary seems to favor the emergence of a special supertype.

The common and voluntary forgetting of history results in all these races associating together in a new type. Thus it would appear that the particular seduction of life in America is that of "a new chance," or he mounts, a re-beginning—without the crushing burden of history and prejudice to weigh them down, and armed with all the advantages and inventions of modern science.

Hegemony
Europe Being Divested Of Old Prestige

Ask the German Jew, who in some 10 or 20 years has become the head of a great bank, ask the laborer from Mexico who sells the strength of his muscles in the south, or the Russian who speculates in California oil, or the Austrian violinist, or the Italian barber—ask them where they come from. None of them will deny his origin and race; but all alike will proclaim their pride in America.

For a long time America attracted only "laborers" and "speculators." Now she is beginning to lure even the "intellectuals."

The American "influence"? Let us not confuse things. The spread of American influence is still very feeble in comparison to her real power in the world. Her commercial and maritime penetration throughout the rest of the world is still quite inferior to what it is believed to be, and to what it might become. There is on the other hand a kind of social irradition which is universally felt today and has a remarkable influence, to a varying degree, upon the ways of humanity everywhere.

The time is near at hand when the United States will have divested Europe of its "worldly" prestige in the eyes of new nations.

"Politically, whatever some people may say, the influence of America is almost nil. Financially, America is rather strong, for reasons connected with the liquidation of the war. But in Europe, it is in the evolution of morals and tastes that American influence is most perceptible. One could draw quite an amazing picture of the invasion of "Americanism" to be witnessed in the oldest capitals of Europe, London, Paris and Rome.

May we say, then, that the social prestige of the United States exceeds even her economic prestige?

We cannot venture very accurately, as yet, to predict what will be the value and staying power of this form of civilization. Let us limit ourselves to pointing out the new qualities or instruments it grants to men, and also those older ones which in its present state, it is powerless to retain.

The chief qualities of American civilization are surely those of youth, elan and broad-mindedness.

Rejuvenation
New Springs of Hope for All Humanity

Who does not speak of the youthfulness of the American people? Certain travelers even remark on what they call their "childishness." At all events, youthfulness seems to be regarded as one of the specifically American traits.

We like to divide the human race into old and young nations.

In reality, there are no old nations and no young ones. There are peoples whose social constitution leads them to cultivate the air of youth, and others who favor the attitudes of old age.

The same Chinaman whom you would have taken in Peiping for a phantom, come up from buried centuries, would appear verdant and bourgeoning to you in San Francisco or Boston.

The poor Jew, departed but recently from some sordid village of Eastern Europe, marked with the premature signs of age, will astound you with his vim and his cleanliness along the banks of the Hudson, or the Mississippi.

This is a tremendous lesson which the American example teaches us; the ease with which supposedly old races may be rejuvenated, when transplanted into a new mode of life. It is an example from which we may derive new springs of hope for all humanity!

It has often been remarked that the citizens of the United States happen to have the good fortune of being able to exploit a whole continent.

The success of their civilization depends to such a degree upon this fact alone that if their territory should be cut off in parts, or split up into fragments, the American society in its present form could not bear the strain for long, and political necessities would for the time being take pre-eminence over economic interests.

Europe
Condemned to Suffer From Political Problems

This observation may yield important reflections upon Europe as well.

Europe is condemned to suffer from political problems because of her fragmentation, because of her many and narrow national borders, and the impossibility of satisfying conflicting interests in a too constricted field of action.

If Europe continues in a state of fragmentation, on historical grounds, she may remain of course a cradle of civilization, of creative and inventive effort, but she will have more and more difficulty in following America in the path of universalized "efficiency" and material prosperity.

Already the two types of civilization are ranging themselves against each other: the European type, of personal imagination or invention and individual well-being and the American type of initiative (which is quite different from inventiveness) and of social well-being.

One may prefer one type or the other. But if we consider the ends of civilization in the light of mass needs, and on the other hand the tendency of capitalism itself toward a form which is more and more collectivistic and impersonal, we must acknowledge that during the present

PAINLEVE SEES A POLICY OF CONCILIATION REFLECTED IN FRENCH PARLIAMENT ELECTION

Statesman Analyzes the Effect Of Hitlerism on Voters In France

By PAUL PAINLEVE
Former Premier of France.

By Special Cable

PARIS, May 14.

WE ARE NOW at the end of the waiting period during which all great international problems were postponed. It was a sort of unspoken agreement not to entrust the solution of them to expiring powers, but rather to the new parliaments, the safe governments of the morrow.

Now that the elections in Austria, Germany and France are ended, whether one is grieved or overjoyed at the results, the forces and tendencies with which we are faced are known. Is it possible even now to foresee the exact solutions to which the future will turn?

One result is obtained in Germany. The revolution which was thought imminent is not for the moment to be feared. A month ago, estimating the Hitlerite chances in Prussia, I reckoned the vote they would obtain at considerably less than 40 per cent.

In any case, I concluded, their elected candidates will be of insufficient number to obtain the government of Prussia. On the other hand the sense of [illegible] will prevent them from trying force, and the constitution of Weimar will be maintained, the republic saved.

Stability
It Is Needed to Solve Economic Problems

Not attaining in fact an absolute majority the Nazis, reduced to their own strength, alone cannot seize power legally even if the Center gives in and consents to associate with the Nazis. The Center would introduce [illegible] elements into the new cabinet which would oppose any attempt at violence.

At the same time, nonrealization of the Nazis' extravagant promises would take from the National Socialist (Nazi) party the vigor of Nazi propaganda and weaken its impulse.

Nevertheless, the prospects offered for the future are far from attractive. The triumph of a solution will take long. Calm, a great deal of stability and a great deal of moderation are necessary. But can one talk of moderation after the tremendous Nazi campaign which has just been crowned with partial success?

Can one talk of stability when in intervals of a few days the Reich Minister of the Interior dissolved as illegal the Hitlerite fighting organizations, refused to take the same measure with regard to the Reichsbanner, and then, while dissolving all fighting organizations, gave them all, on certain conditions, a legal status?

Such contradictions are an obvious indication of the clash of antagonistic influences of almost equal force. Their opposition may be felt even in those nearest President Von Hindenberg, before whom Chancellor Bruening must plead. It may be felt even in the war ministry where the Minister has to cope with the resistance of his own subordinates whose sympathies are for Hitlerite tendencies. These facts must be taken into account far from [illegible] agreement of reasons.

Radical Socialists Add to Their Ranks

The final results of the elections in France notably accentuated the drift to the Left, the success of the Left parties having exceeded the most optimistic predictions.

The Socialists have increased their lead by 20 seats, the Radicals landing 159 in all, and other moderate parties proportionately.

How explain this increase gained during the week intervening between the first and second ballots?

The explanation is: First, that one victory tends to bring on another; second, the deal whereby the Socialists withdrew in favor of the Radicals the second election, and vice versa, and thirdly, the hysterical cries of the reactionaries, which proved a boomerang.

Accusations that a vote for the Left was a vote against the franc and against France, reacted upon themselves.

However, whatever the reasons, the new Chamber of Deputies is definitely Left and Moderate. It will be full of new ideas and eagerness to go, but it will need experience because of the 235 new Deputies. Discipline and no attempt at the impossible to keep the public's confidence—these should be its directives.

What leader, and what government, will emerge? One cannot foretell with precision. All depends on the Socialists. Will they enter the government or simply give passive support? Will the question of which action to take divide the Socialists into two warring camps?

This seems to me a little likely as that the Socialists will definitely enter into the opposition, as some affirm is most possible. But if that happens a government majority can only be found by tilting frankly into the Right. In any case we shall soon know.

Warning
Hitlerite Gains Put French On Guard

I have just spent four weeks in the heart of a peasant population which did its duty splendidly in the war. I have been in daily contact with these people. The Hitlerite push has not altered their calm unconcern.

Without being informed diplomats these are sensible men who read and reflect. They do not demand the impossible. They understand that the German wish to better certain conditions of the peace to which they were subjected, but that a doctrine based principally on hate, on dreams of violence and revenge should receive millions of votes to support it is [illegible] which, without frightening them, puts them on their guard.

STATESMAN—Edouard Herriot, former French Premier, leader of the Radical Socialists and outstanding figure in the recent electoral battle for control of Parliament and the new government in France.

The elections of May 1 were by no means elections of fear or of panic. The truth is their character would have been more markedly to the Left if Germany had shown herself less favorable to extremist agitation.

Despite invectives and threats from the other side of the Rhine and the publication of Stresemann's correspondence with the Crown Prince, which throws suspicion of duplicity on the German negotiator, the mass of the French people remains true to the policy of rapprochement between nations, a policy with which the name of Briand was inseparably connected.

They understand that the ills from which they are suffering so cruelly, unemployment and the slump in trade, are consequences of the universal loss of economic balance, that other countries are suffering from them even more cruelly and that this universal loss of balance is due essentially to international distrust and insecurity.

What they find particularly disquieting in the Hitlerite movement is not the prospect of future war, for they are aware that the clamor for revenge is for internal use, but they are afraid the development of this disorderly agitation may increase unrest and consequently the poverty and despair which the recruiting of Hitlerism ensures. Civil war, foreign war, who can tell what the issue will be?

Do not take any notice of German parties is the advice of certain philosophers, [illegible]. It is a thing which concerns only Germany, they say. Let Hitlerism evolve as it lives in the confines of the Reich.

Trotsky!
At Least He Has Sense Of Reality

These counsellors are at one with the Soviet doctrines. In the eyes of Moscow there is no difference between Social Democracy and Hitlerite Fascism. But Trotsky, to whom one must grant a sense of reality, vigorously refutes this paradoxical impartiality and shows in an article written with powerful logic that the triumph of Hitlerism would lead in the end to taking from the proletariat not only its material conquests but also the instrument essential to its conquests, namely, its organizations.

These are arguments as decisive as any defenders of the European order can oppose to those who assert indifference as to whether Bruening or Hitler rules.

Of course, the moderate Frenchman perfectly understands the duty of not mixing in the politics of another nation, of taking an interest only in the exterior consequences this policy is likely to provoke.

But since the present danger of Hitlerism is to prolong by means of mistrust the period of loss of economic balance, that generator of poverty and suffering, and since that poverty may lead to desperate revolutions, those who wish to re-establish stability in our old world are obliged to adopt an attitude of opposition to provocative and extravagant formulas by pursuing a policy of conciliation.

This attitude does not exclude careful watchfulness in discouraging evil intention in advance. This wise advice is what emerges from the recent French elections.

U. S. Always Recovers From Its Economic Depressions, Declares Grand Duke Alexander

Russian Nobleman Recalls Unjustified Pessimism of John Jacob Astor in 1893

By GRAND DUKE ALEXANDER OF RUSSIA
Author of "Once a Grand Duke."

"THERE IS THE DEVIL to pay in the street! I regret to admit that the whole country stands on the brink of a precipice."

So thoroughly modern, so typically 1932 sound these defeatist words that it is almost impossible to believe that I heard the late John Jacob Astor pronounce them as far back as June 13, 1893—that is to say, 39 years (and five major depressions) before the advent of what is described by our over-excited contemporaries as the "worst crisis in the history of the United States."

Do not think I am blind to the magnitude of the present American plight, but it so happens that each one of my three visits to the United States—in 1893, 1913 and now—coincided with a period of grave economic depression or financial stagnation, and this has provided me with ample observation as to the chronic attitude of the Americans in moments of distress.

No doubt, the underlying causes of those three crises considerably differ in character and intensity, but the bankers and stock brokers of 1893 were just as hysterical in their pronouncements and just as cowardly in their actions as their heirs and successors of 1932 are.

Nothing changed in Wall Street, save the catch-words.

Today, my powerful friends tell me that "capitalism is doomed" and the country is rapidly approaching an era of "modified Sovietism," which 39 years ago Mr. Astor informed me in all earnestness that it would take an "unmitigated fool" to maintain that prosperity would ever return again.

Presidents
Cleveland Knew Hoover's Difficulties

The spectre of Bolshevism may not have existed in 1893, but there was no lack of equally terrifying "bogies." "Fiat money," "[illegible]," "reign of anarchy"—these and similar ghosts preyed on the minds of the supposedly great American leaders of the 90's, just as "the danger to the gold standard," "a 20 cent dollar," and other sinister expressions disturb the mental equilibrium of the excited "calamity janes" of 1932.

I imagine President Hoover must look with envious sympathy at the portrait of President Cleveland, for nothing that causes sleepless nights to the present tenant of the White House was unknown to his staunch predecessor of 1893.

The "hoarding," the menacing "flight from the dollar," the poisonous rumors of gossip spread by the [illegible] of Paris and Amsterdam, the colossal unemployment, the pathetic sight of endless breadlines—all of this greeted me on the day I first landed on the island of Manhattan.

"I felt then, in April, 1893, as I do now in the spring of 1932, that an amazingly short memory constitutes the greatest weakness of the Americans as a nation: no other people forget as quickly and derive as little benefit from the experiences of the past.

Coincidence
Lament of 1893 Is Heard As 1913 Refrain

God knows, nobody can outcry the French or outgloom the British, and yet I have never seen a Parisian banker or a London stock broker who would have whimpered that "the present depression is bound to lead to universal collapse." For one thing, the European businessman's eyes are not glued to the ticker, and he is able to look back over a period of at least half a century—a laudable habit obviously unknown to the American banking brotherhood.

Whenever I try to recite the object lessons of 1893 to my Wall Street friends—even to those of them who are credited with possessing "astute judgment" and "uncanny power of analysis"—they counter me with the same stereotyped phrase:

"Do not compare 1893 with 1932. What we are going through now is much more than just a depression. We are facing the necessity of revising the whole of our capitalistic system!"

It would be decidedly presumptuous on my part to attempt to disparage the opinions of these business giants, but it does seem odd that at least the elders of the clan told me PRECISELY THE SAME THING BOTH IN 1913 AND 1893.

"Do you recall," I recently asked a famous investment banker, "what you said to me in Newport, in the summer of 1913, when the fore-running shadows of the war brought about a period of acute stagnation?"

He frowned:

"Do not attempt to . . ."

"Yes, yes, I know," I interrupted him rather brusquely, "I should not attempt to compare 1932 with 1913, but let me finish. Do you recall that 19 years ago you were very angry with me because I dared to compare 1913 with 1893?"

"I do not recall that," he answered gruffly.

Comparison
Takes Statement for Meeting in Decade

"No, of course, you wouldn't . . . I have still another question to ask. Do you recall that peaceful July evening of 1893 when we stood in front of the British pavilion on the grounds of the World's Fair in Chicago, discussing the future and guessing the possible outcome of the American depression?"

"Good Lord," he exclaimed impatiently, "how can you expect me to recall a conversation that took place almost 40 years ago?"

"You should, because on that particular occasion you told me that the country was going straight to the dogs and that no sane man could draw a comparison between 1893 and 1873 . . . 'What people do not realize,' you said, 'is that America is being confronted with the necessity of bringing down its standards of living' . . . those were the exact words you used in July, 1893."

"I don't believe it . . . I could not have been so silly, even at the age of 30," exclaimed the now gray-haired sage of Wall Street.

I suggested that, should we both be alive 10 years from today, we must meet again and compare the future depression of the 1940's with the present "unprecedented" crisis.

However, this time I was not willing to [illegible] of the 1940's."

On Record
Phrases of 1893 in Old Headlines

I added [illegible] phrase of his as a postscript to the [illegible] and enclosed the whole thing in the same yellowish envelope which contains clippings from New York newspapers dated June 6, June 13 and June 20, 1893. The headlines read as follows:

"Wall Street wrapped in gloom. New York Central, at 14, reaches new low. Hoarding continues unabated. More bankruptcies within next 24 hours."

"Wild and unfounded rumors cause senseless run on Chicago banks."

"All western banks forced to adopt measures of precaution to avoid runs."

"Numerous southern banks closed."

"Several Colorado mines shut down. Thousands of workers out of jobs."

"Extreme monetary stringency in Northwest threatens crash."

So much for Wall Street, with its [illegible] and analysts.

It is gratifying to be able to recall that the man in the street has always displayed a much greater courage in his tenacious if unadvertised battle with the depressions.

Although the real victim of each successive American crisis, he has invariably managed to preserve his sanity, and has viewed the hardships of the moment with an equanimity seldom observed among the members of the Bankers' Club. They raved and predicted ruination, he remained stolid, his faith in his country undiminished and his admirable courage unscathed.

Heroic
Behavior of 'Common' American Praiseworthy

Were it possible to draw a "chart of hysteria" covering all classes of the population of the United States, I have no doubt that the peak of the curve would correspond to the private office of some financial magnate, somewhere around the corner of Broad and Wall streets, New York, while the lowest point would be found somewhere in the middlewest, on a farm threatened with foreclosure proceedings.

[illegible] and no [illegible] information" leads me to make this supposition. In the course of each one of my three visits to America I have crossed the continent from coast to coast, [illegible] people in all walks of life, sharing their interests, listening to their [illegible] and bringing back to New York a supply of [illegible] sufficient to [illegible] a dozen [illegible] multimillionaires.

As far as the "common" man is concerned, his behavior in 1932 is, in my estimation, no less heroic than it was in 1913 and 1893.

This is truly remarkable, considering that the strength-sapping habit of watching the ticker has deeply penetrated into the core of the nation and that the "closing prices" of United States Steel and General Electric are discussed nowadays wherever American is spoken.

It stands to reason that the road to recovery—always a thorny one to travel—is so much more difficult for a nation hypnotized by the sight of the "big board" and inclined to mistake the ominous initials "X," "GM," "R," etc., for

Rogers Performs as Master of Ceremonies For Hollywood's Opening of 'Grand Hotel'

Audience Didn't Like the Sage's Comedy Presentation of Berry as Greta Garbo

By WILL ROGERS

WELL ALL I KNOW is just what I read in the papers, and what I run into prowling about Hollywood.

You remember one time when I was on the Radio and did a little imitation of Mr. Coolidge. Well some of em raised cain. Said I shouldent have done it. I even went so far as to ask Mr. Coolidge if it had offended him and he replied, "Why I dident even pay any attention to it."

Well a week or so ago I was asked to be master of ceremonies at the opening of that great big picture "Grand Hotel." Syd Grauman, the manager of the Chinese Theater in Hollywood, is the manager, and he is not only a great showman but a fine fellow. Then Mr. Louie B. Mayer asked me, and I was tickled to do it.

I had never been around any of these "openings," in fact had always kidded about em, for there is plenty to kid at one. The whole thing is the biggest "Hooey" out here. The Studios would like to do away with em for they bring em nothing but cost.

But its a great "Yokel" show. This was an especially big one for it was the biggest cast picture ever made. Think of Greta Garbo, the two Barrymores, Joan Crawford, Wally Berry, Jean Hersholt, Tully Marshall and about half the other pay roll of Hollywood.

WELL IT WAS a bear of a night, judging by people standing outside on soap boxes, and folks inside with old overhauled ermine's. They have an intermission and everybody goes out and looks at each other and you cant get em back in again. They would rather look at each other than the show.

But it was what the Society reporter would call "The Elite," what the film fan reporter would call "Aristocracy of Filmdom," and what the poor folks on the street, that some of em wasent eating regular would call "The Nuts."

But all joking aside they was our best bunch. New York hasent got it on Hollywood for clothes. It was lovely looking out there. And some mighty fine substantial folks. There is some pretty down to earth people in our business, and lots of em have been into it long enough to realize that its a kind of business after all.

This fellow Grauman had a wonderful prologue. He put on a $2 vaudeville show, had Will Mahoney, just about the cleverest one-man actor in vaudeville and musical comedies. He had been for years the "ace" of Earl Carroll's Vanities.

Well, Will knocked old Hollywood batty. He does a dance on the xylophones with his feet that is better than I ever heard with the hands. In fact, that would be a good way to get rid of this overworked xylophone racket — make everybody play 'em with your feet. I have heard folks playing 'em that it sounded like they must have been using their feet, but this was the only time I ever saw it done. There was a bunch of clever acts.

MY JOB was to introduce the cast that was in the picture. Now of course you all know about Greta Garbo. She don't go anywhere, or she may go everywhere, for no one gets to her home to see if she has gone anywhere or not, but she really, I guess, don't get round people at all.

The people in the studio that she worked for have to go see her in the picture when they want to see her. She is just like a hermit, and these writers that write stories about her, they never even get to see a photograph of her. Now everybody out here knows that. They know that she is not going to be anywhere.

But that night after I had introduced all the principals of the cast except John Barrymore, who was not there, I announced that on account of the importance of the occasion, and the prominence that this particular picture had received, that Miss Garbo would break her rule and be there, and that immediately after the picture was over that she had consented to come on the stage and take a bow, and that I would be highly honored by having her there when the picture was over.

Well Mr. Grauman starts his shows. He thinks the later they are started the better they are. Syd dont know or has perhaps forgot that all the big first nights in New York are started on time anyhow, no matter when they are finished. Well this one dident start till nine thirty, and was over, the picture at one fifteen. Now thats pretty late for a country town, and after all we are a country town. Its a big one, but its country.

WELL I HAD framed up a gag with Wally Berry who I knew would be a big hit in the picture that they had just seen, and he got some "dame" clothes. And he was my Greta Garbo. Sounds kinder funny dont it? Well it wasent to them.

Wally did it fine. He even looked like her, but not enough to satisfy that crowd. Now they should have known that Garbo wasent going to be there any more than Coolidge, but they go and believe it and then get sore at themselves for believing it. I dident mean any harm. Gosh us Comedians must get laughs.

The Easiest Way

HARRY WANTED MAMIE—and no question about it. The odds were at least a thousand to one that Mamie was going to be his girl because, ever since he had been a kid, he [illegible] managed to get what he wanted.

Funny thing about Harry's success: he had always achieved it the easiest way. When he left school he found an easy way to avoid work. It was all very simple; he merely stole the things he wanted. When, in later years, things became tough for his mob, he quit the boys without any ceremony and started a mob of his own.

In due time the man was [illegible] . . . and wanted Mamie.

[illegible]

[illegible] Harry that the girl that he wanted her.

"You're my type kid," he stated. "Not too wise but not too dumb. I could learn to go for a girl like you."

The following night Harry was in again. And the night after too. And when he returned on the fourth night he took Mamie to a corner table and made the proposition very [illegible].

"I'm nuts about you, Mamie," he said, "and I want you to be my girl. I'm no great sheik, but I think we'll be okay, together. You like me a little, too, don't you?"

Mamie nodded [illegible].

"You bet I do, Harry," she returned. "I never met anybody just like you. You're so strong and so important that—well, it gives a little girl like me a thrill just to talk to you."

"That's great, girlie," was Harry's contribution. "Well, what do you say? You quit this job. I'll get you an apartment and support you in swell style. I'll be plenty good to you, Mamie. What do you say?"

The girl's eyes clouded. She pressed a tiny handkerchief to her nose.

"All right," she said. "It's a go, Harry."

Then a short time later, Mamie was ensconced in a very pretty apartment. Everything was quite lovely. Harry had the girl he wanted and Mamie had the man.

But, sadly enough, the man Mamie wanted wasn't Harry. It was Clarence . . .

Clarence was the master of ceremonies in the cafe in which Mamie had been appearing.

He knew that Mamie was plenty stuck on him. But what of that? He just couldn't be bothered with returning too much affection.

"It's this way, baby," he once told her. "I know you're nuts about me and I guess you're okay with me too. But I'm a man who strictly plays the field. Little Clarence isn't getting stuck on no one skirt. No, sir.

"Nothing doing, honey. I'll take you out when I feel in the mood. But lay off the heavy love stuff."

With such a philosophy, you'd think that Clarence would have seen no more of Mamie after she left the club. But when he learned whom she had caught and that her sweetie was lavishing money upon her, the most amazing thing happened. Clarence suddenly found out that he had been in love all the time. And when he met her in a speakeasy one afternoon and she slipped a $100 bill into his hand before she left, he was positive that she was the girl of his dreams.

Thus, in due time, Clarence also gave up his job in the cafe. So long as Harry was so generous with Mamie, why should Clarence continue to work?

For more than a year the situation went on in exactly that manner. All of Harry's friends knew that he was being two-timed in the expert manner—but, as usual, the gentleman most concerned didn't have the slightest suspicion that anything was wrong.

Well, the matter came to a head some two months later. Harry was sitting in his office one afternoon when an enemy came in and told him the entire story.

"Harry," said the enemy, "you know that I'm one of the best friends you'll ever have. I've been thinking this thing over for a long time, and I finally decided that it would be best to let you know about it. You won't get sore, will you?"

Harry shook his head.

"Well," his "pal" went on, "it's about Mamie. You're getting the double-cross, and you have been getting it ever since you took her out of that cafe. The other man in the case is a cheap mug named Clarence P——, who was the master of ceremonies in the same cafe. I guess you remember him. . . .

"Do you know what she's been doing, Harry? She's been turning over to him almost every dollar you've ever given her for herself. He's sporting a Packard roadster and having the time of his life, but you're buying the gas and paying for his apartment."

Harry laughed heartily.

"I thought you had some real news, kid," he lied. "Did you think you were givin' me information? Ha, ha. I've known all about it for almost a year."

His 'pal' left shortly after. He really believed that Harry had known about it before and he was deeply grieved that the man had not gone into hysterics. I'm rather happy he couldn't see Harry tossing papers against a wall and hear him cursing loudly at that very moment. . . .

That night, before he went home, Harry did some tall thinking. And finally he grinned from ear to ear. An idea had arrived and it was as simple as it could be. He stopped in at a certain spot, spent 10 minutes in the rear of the place with two men and then went home to Mamie.

She kissed him sweetly. He smiled into her eyes and placed a hand in his pocket.

"It's your birthday this week, isn't it, kid?" he asked.

"Yes, daddy," she returned. "On Saturday. Why?"

"Oh," muttered Harry. "I just wanted to make sure I didn't forget your little present. Here you are, sweets."

He handed her 10 $100 bills and something that passed for a kiss. She threw her arms around him tightly.

"Thank you, daddy," she cried. "You're the sweetest man that ever lived. Thank you a million times."

It's too bad Harry couldn't have seen her eyes as she gazed into the mirror over her shoulder. They were saying, "What a sucker!" . . .

EVERYTHING came off exactly as Harry had planned. The $100 bills, of course, were all counterfeit—and Clarence was arrested the following evening for attempting to pass a phoney bill. He was taken into custody at once and he didn't have a chance to advance much of an alibi. With nine other counterfeits in his pockets, things looked a trifle black.

Harry wondered if Mamie would have nerve enough ever to return to his house. She did, although it was past midnight when she came in. He gazed at her coldly and came to the point at once.

"The money I gave you last night was phoney," he told her, "and your boy friend's been nabbed. You pack up and get out of here. You're a cheatin' little rat—and you're lucky I didn't kill you. Get out!"

Mamie smiled sweetly.

"I have no intention of going," she said. "Let me explain something to you. If Clarence says he got the money from me, and he probably will, I'll be called downtown. If I say it came from you, things won't be so good, will they? But if I say I never saw Clarence before, things will be better, won't they? Did you forget that angle?"

Harry's eyes had opened wide.

"And another thing," Mamie went on. "I heard the news of the arrest just about when you did. So I rushed down to my lawyer, wrote out a list of all the things I knew about you and placed it in a sealed envelope in his safe. He has instructions to give it to the district attorney if anything ever happens to me.

"Do you still want me to go, darling?"

The astonishment faded from Harry's eyes. And in its stead came a look of genuine admiration.

"You know I'll never want you to go now, baby," was his reply. "But tell me one thing. How did you figure this all out?"

"Oh," returned Mamie carelessly, "I took a lesson from you and simply looked for the easiest way." . . .

DEMOCRATIC HARMONY IN PUBLIC INTEREST IS SPEAKER'S IDEAL, DECLARES MRS. GARNER

Economy and Legislative Efficiency Are Objects of Texan's Leadership, She Explains

FOLLOWING is the third part of Mrs. John N. Garner's story of Speaker Garner's official life. Previous installments told of his early career and present day duties. This narrative continues with Speaker Garner's home life, and his ideas of official economy.

By MRS. JOHN N. GARNER

Wife of the Speaker of the House of Representatives,

(Reprinted from the May issue of Good Housekeeping Magazine.

MY WORK takes up so much time that I do not even get out to shop. The plain black dresses I'm wearing in the office were purchased for me by my daughter-in-law before we left home. My friends here sort of look out for me. The other day one of them 'phoned and said:

"There's a dress on F street that looks just like you."

As soon as I could, I rushed down to the store, because I needed a dress, and thought that would save time. But it was gone.

I do not even have time to buy everything I need in one shopping expedition. It took me days to find time to go out after new shoe strings!

I bought a pretty black lace dress for dinner at the White House one day, and had to wait until the next to take time off to get the slippers. It required a third foray to secure gloves. [illegible] I hoped Mrs. Hoover wouldn't mind seeing me again in the same gown I had worn at the [illegible] dinner.

I do the same things months on end here in Washington, but I save up little tasks to do around the apartment on the rare occasions when Mr. Garner has to go out with men. Then responsibility just rolls away. I read, I sew, and do all the little odds and ends I neglect when he's in the apartment. I want him to have all the peace and quiet possible at home.

Domestic
Old Habits of Thrift Are Useful

I not only take care of my own clothes, but I always brush and press and mend and clean spots off Mr. Garner's, too, until they really have to go to the cleaner's. In the past we have always had to practice small economies in order to save money for the important things, for we have always lived on Mr. Garner's salary. Moreover, I'm used to it.

Down in Texas where we live there were no dry cleaners in the early days. A [illegible] just had to keep her husband's things [illegible] and tidy, that was all. I've always taken pride in attending to such details myself. [illegible] I couldn't have done much different, for I should have had to stand over a servant and show her how it should be done.

I must say I've always been proud of my mending. No one can't ever tell that the elbow of my office dress is darned and patched. Once when my boy was young and was wearing a new suit, to tease him a girl pinned it to the [illegible] with a safety pin. When he got up, it tore. She felt [illegible], but he consoled her.

Economies
Opposed to Building Up Extravagance

"Don't worry, Mother will patch it so it won't show."

That's the kind of reputation I had.

I still love to sew, to [illegible], to cook, and to work [illegible]. I've been handy and economical so long now [illegible] nothing could change my ways. They are fixed habits.

Material things never seem important anyhow, Mr. Garner and his work are the outstanding facts in my life. I've been asked if I did not give up the Speaker's car reluctantly. Actually I never thought about it enough to care one way or another.

We had a car as long as our son was with us. When he went into the army in 1917 I drove it myself. In 1919, when we sent all our furniture back to Texas, we disposed of the car and have never bought another here. I've grown accustomed to not having one. When the question came up, it was no deprivation to do without it. I can walk, or take the street car to town, as before, or a taxi.

Moreover I still have the old wifely attitude that if my husband thought it best that we shouldn't have the car, it was best. Mr. Garner didn't approve of the government's maintaining a car for the Speaker when Champ Clark was in office. He doesn't like these small expenses; they all lump up into big ones.

Mr. Garner realizes the importance of an accumulation of little things, just as he understands the greater issues. He is profoundly aware of the fact that he has come to power at a critical period. He [illegible] that his work as Speaker shall fulfill, in so far as it is possible, the needs of the nation, and that it shall meet with the satisfaction of his colleagues who have so signally honored him, and of the Democratic party.

One of his innovations to this end is the "policy committee," composed of Democratic leaders of both House and Senate. Their function is to formulate general party policy on proposed legislation. Here viewpoints are reconciled, controversies eliminated, legislative programs agreed upon, and the party geared to act in smooth cooperation in both chambers, instead of independently, with frequent friction, as in the past.

Woman's Duty
To Make Husband as Happy as Possible

He is using every effort to maintain harmony at all times, and the widest and deepest public good. This is a great responsibility, which I bear too, [illegible].

I am [illegible], however, and believe that God directs everything. I am not a more woman in the churchgoing sense, for these days I have all too little time for worship in church. I often have to go to the office on Sunday mornings. That doesn't bother me too much. Religion doesn't amount to anything, if it is not in every moment of everyday life. I know that if I daily and steadily trust myself and my work in His hands, only good will come.

When I am at home on our farm, I leave every door and window open even when I am alone. I have no fear. I believe in God's protection.

I don't pray much, like other people. The very words, "God help me solve this problem," are my deepest prayer. It's not necessary, unless you want it, to have an elaborate form to tell Him what you need and what He ought to do for you. He knows and is caring for you, now as ever.

That's my belief. I don't intrude it on anybody else. Other people are privileged and welcome to think the way they want to. Certainly no restrictions should be laid on that.

In the crisis in which the world is suffering today, I think women have two outstanding duties: to be strong in their faith, and to accept the need for retrenchment, to do it gracefully, and to make their homes and their husbands as happy and as peaceful as possible. What else women can do is the problem of each individual.

If you read the stories of the women whose husbands made history, you will find that most of them stayed home and directed their domestic affairs. And, today, if each woman who has a home, would stay in it and attend to it, all this restless disquiet would cease.

Once simplicity is a reigning virtue, we shall be a happier people. The little things of life give the greatest contentment. The more simply we live, the more [illegible].

We were talking [illegible] Fishburne, [illegible], an apple grower, [illegible] for Christmas [illegible].

"[illegible]," I told him.

Just then Mr. Garner [illegible].

"Well, Mrs. Garner and I have solved the problem of living," Mr. Fishburne said. "I'm going to trade my apples for her pecans."

But the economic issues of the day are Mr. Garner's field, not mine. [illegible] I don't have independent political convictions. I don't consider that I know enough of the big subjects to have valuable opinions.

If my husband were out of political life, I should retreat to my own fireside and never have anything to do with public affairs again, [illegible] agree with my husband; I have always found him right.

Old-Fashioned
The Homely Virtues Still Seem the Best

It is, of course, impossible to have lived 37 years with a man in politics and not have plenty of ideas. Sometimes I have differed with him. Then he has shown me my error, and how matters would work out if done my way.

We women can't see every point of a question the way a man does. He gets out among men as a woman never can. I don't believe she should.

Nevertheless I believe that a woman, no matter how strong her husband, molds him unconsciously, unnoticed by herself or by him. I realized many years ago that I have an unfortunate habit of summing up personalities; when I meet new people I'm rarely mistaken in my conclusions. I'm good at sizing them up. After a bit I noticed that sooner or later Mr. Garner would be holding or reflecting my opinion of them.

[illegible] I'm always careful [illegible] nothing. It's better for a husband to [illegible] woman's opinions than for her to mold his.

[illegible] the public life.

I think it's dangerous.

I have found my life, with the [illegible] of wifehood and motherhood, deeply satisfying. That it has taken me into the realm of public affairs in the wake of my husband has made it as interesting as it has been arduous.

Still, I am always aware of [illegible] house at home, the garden, the pecan trees, [illegible] of our lives.

DOWN HOME—*If a time shall come when the nation may spare Speaker Garner from Washington, he and his wife will find ease and happiness at their home in Uvalde, Tex., writes Mrs. Garner. ## Hindenburg, Triumphant Over His Enemies, Longs for German Unity

Well Pleased by Comments of The Press

By ROBERT BARRY

Universal Service Correspondent

BERLIN, May, 1932.

BEHIND THE GRIM, aged-lined countenance of Field Marshal von Hindenberg, the President of Germany, is hidden a wistful, sometimes deep emotion, vague, puzzling.

To only a very few of his cronies, old comrades in arms, has he revealed it.

Those who penetrate the stern mask of the octogenarian, hardened grim old soldier, are cautious in discussing what has been revealed to them in conversations privileged to the narrowest of circles.

It is that the President of the Reich is gratified extremely over the esteem in which he is held by the people and the Government whose legions he fought to the end of the strength of Imperial armies.

Grateful
Reaction to Re-election Pleases Marshal

He is immensely pleased over the reaction to his re-election in those countries he fought—the United States, England, Canada, even France. To be hailed by the press and public of those erstwhile foes as the reliance, the bulwark, the savior of a struggling and distressed German Republic, after having been hated so cordially from 1914 to 1918 as the military genius and the world-wide symbol of Hohenzollernism, touches the 85-year-old heart of this man, who was a student soldier when Andrew Johnson was in the White House.

The editorial comment of the press of many nations has been translated for him. He speaks and reads only German. He was truly grateful.

There is but one thing of regret.

It came out a few days ago when some of his old friends called to congratulate him on his re-election.

He cited Mussolini, who has the people of Italy almost solidly back of him.

He observed that almost any government in France carries the support of the French people in a crisis. They back the government of France against the world.

The people of England were able to rise to an emergency and elect a national government to carry the Union Jack through a crisis.

Why is Germany different?

Why all this political bickering?

Why cannot the German people forget petty differences in an emergency and present a united front to the world?

The Reichspresident's guests were unable to answer him.

They left with him the thing he has been [illegible] ever in his mind.

It was not that Hindenburg wants every German to be merely for Hindenburg. Not at all. He regards himself solely as an instrument of Germany [illegible].

He would prefer to retire and live the life of a [illegible] burgher, to hunt when he pleased or to stroll amid trees and flowers with his grandchildren and barter words of wisdom with them, instead of listening to ministerial reports or the empty platitudes of ambassadors.

Republicans
"Iron Front" Stunned By President's Order

But he has sworn loyalty to the Constitution of Weimar. He regards that oath as something more than a formality of an inaugural [illegible].

It is to him a solemn obligation. On it he stands. It is a new "Hindenburg Line."

The Field Marshal remains a soldier. He cannot ever be a politician. His purposes are immutable. Born to be a German soldier, he will die fighting for Germany.

During the presidential campaigns there was a not unexpected series of rumors about the [illegible] and activities of the President.

His political opponents—[illegible] themselves his enemies—spread assiduously the report that the Reichspresident had become a mere "rubber stamp," knowing little of the affairs of government, signing such things as the chancellor and other political leaders placed before him.

Germany's "grand old man" gave the lie to those assertions a few days after his re-election.

[illegible]

GRATEFUL—President Von Hindenburg of Germany, who has been greatly pleased by the editorial comment in the press of many nations following his re-election as the Reichs president.

mysterious signals broadcast by an inexorable fate.

From this point of view, the average American of 1932 has a harder fight on his hands than his blissfully unsophisticated predecessor of 1893. The former frets and worries over things which do not concern him in the least, while the later concentrates solely on his job or his crops.

I shall never forget an elderly gentlemen I met aboard a Chicago-bound train in the notorious summer of 1893. An owner of a small drygoods store somewhere in Michigan, he had watched the crisis not from a leather chair in a broker's office, but from behind his own [illegible] register. The failure of three banks in his town had forced him to sell his merchandise on credit only—a thing he was doing with surprising cheerfulness.

"Are you not afraid?" I [illegible] shall [illegible]?"

"Not for a second. You see, it's like this. Ours is a small community, and we all know each other and trade with each other. The butcher comes to me and buys on credit five yards of silk for his wife, and then an hour later I go to him and buy three pounds of steak, also on credit. We both know that somehow, and in some way, this country will muddle through. It always did. It always shall."

A "rustic" point of view, to be sure, and one that would be certain to provoke an outburst of contemptuous laughter on the part of grave economists, and still . . . looking back across the gulf of two score of years I realize that America DID muddle through, just because of the "somehow and some way" philosophy of my Michigan friend, and in spite of the enlightened pessimism of Mr. J. J. Astor.

cycle the American type has the better chance to win out.

But all in all, what people is really more humane than the American, if we mean by "humanity" the moral sympathy and succor which is always proffered to one's fellow man?

The American may do homage to no other law in the world than that of "efficiency" and work, and exempt no one from this rule; but for this very reason the unfortunate creatures who can do no work stir his sympathies and gain his aid easily.

Let us not forget that the finest aspect shown by America during the war was her charity.

Three Loud Cheers for Play Award

By GILBERT W. GABRIEL

Nobody [illegible] one [illegible] find an[illegible] poss[illegible] with [illegible] Pulitzer [illegible]. This may be slight[illegible] point[illegible] a couple [illegible] putatio[illegible] committees [illegible] choice [illegible] musical comedy "Of Thee I Sing" [illegible] brightest and best [illegible] example [illegible] ly pop[illegible] one [illegible] world [illegible] who [illegible].

Other Possibilities

The other probable candidates [illegible] the Pulitzer laurels [illegible] season were Philip Barry's "The Animal Kingdom," Robert E. Sherwood's "Reunion in Vienna" and Elmer Rice's "The Left Bank" and "Counsellor-at-Law" [illegible] say amen.

After authoring "The Butter and Egg Man" and helping to [illegible] similar exe[illegible] humor of heaven and earth [illegible] the theater-district as "Beggar on Horseback" [illegible] "Once In A Lifetime" [illegible] "The Royal Family" Mr. Kaufman is at last [illegible] solemn session of the academe which has been delegated to hand out the official recognitions, the thousand-dollar purses and the congratulations of the professors and the pundits hereabout.

What About Music

Mr. Kaufman shares his honors with Morrie Ryskind, his fellow librettist, and with Ira Gershwin, who composed the lyrics—perhaps the most cheerily excellent lyrics any American entertainment has ever employed. The quandary of what to do about George Gershwin, [illegible] from his symphonic eminence composed the music of "Of Thee I Sing," has evidently been solved by simply allowing him passenger space aboard the band-wagon. Which does seem a little silly after all. If the Pulitzer prize point was being stretched so far as to reach a musical comedy, it might have been stretched one step further [illegible] embraced the gentleman who furnished the music.

And this particular award, it seems to me, was given not so much to any one of its several members as to the result itself, the sum of all their efforts, the musical comedy which will undoubtedly set the pace and style [illegible] credo for all the best musical comedies of seasons to come. I think this award was given in [illegible] as well as in honor [illegible].

Howling for Satire

For the past four or five years a goodly [illegible] of small [illegible] of theater folk—though [illegible] have been so small [illegible] included a couple of [illegible] critics—has been howling for injections of political satire into the veins of musical comedy.

We were sick unto death of the sugar-water plots and daisy-chain [illegible] the usual song-and-dance [illegible]. We'd called the time for an American approximation of Gilbert and Sullivan, for Offenbach a la mode, for a smart, giddy smiting at all the [illegible] and idiocies of our superb public personalities and of our national life.

And lo, along came the quartet, consisting of the Messrs. Gershwin, Mr. Kaufman and Mr. [illegible]

All things come to those who wait and motion picture extras do plenty of waiting.

The swimming pool will be opened late this month.

Gilbertian Operettas With Sullivan's Music Called 'Frothy Trash'

By GEORGE SEIBEL

THE BEST THING TO OPEN a theatrical season with is a week of Gilbert and Sullivan. The best thing to close a theatrical season with is a week of Gilbert and Sullivan. Gilbert and Sullivan can be either hors d'oeuvres or dessert. Perhaps the Nixon this week serves them as walnuts and wine.

Vain is the dispute over the question whether Gilbert was the more important of the partnership or Sullivan. They were always quarreling, but every time they separated their work suffered. Sullivan was forever wanting to write grand opera, but his "Ivanhoe" is not sung in any opera house of the world. Gilbert had a hankering for high and mighty drama, but when he wrote "Charity" for the Kendals he was denounced as immoral because the play showed sympathy with the fallen woman.

It was only when they were working together in a topsy-turvy world of fairy tales that they achieved immortality and acquired shekels.

Gilbert's Own Romance

Few people know that the germ of nearly all of Gilbert's plots was in a personal experience. When he was about 2 years old he was kidnaped. It happened in Naples. A pair of brigands got the child away from his nurse and demanded a ransom of 25 pounds. Brigands were reasonable in those days. But the 25 pounds was also an excellent investment, for not only "The Pirates of Penzance" but several other Gilbertian librettos are based on the plot of the stolen child, or the child exchanged in the cradle.

As his childhood was surrounded by this glamor of romance so was his end. Gilbert was drowned in a lake of his own gardens while trying to save a young girl from drowning. Although his death was due to syncope from the exertion of the rescue rather than to the water he swallowed he would have been entitled to a posthumous Carnegie hero medal, if there had been such things in his days.

From the Bab Ballads

But it is as a humorist rather than a hero that the world loves Gilbert. He had established himself as a humorist before he wrote librettos or comedies by the publication of "The Bab Ballads," which rival the nonsense verse of Edward Lear or Lewis Carroll.

The Bab Ballads were the mine from which he afterwards dug most of his plots. It has been said that he made two oper-

Airy Opera And Frolic Stage Bill

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

AFTER A SLEEP of six weeks the Nixon stretches itself and then snaps into it again by illuminating for a week of light opera that will begin Monday night. The event will be the presentation of four Gilbert and Sullivan works, one in a double bill. That will include "Trial By Jury" and "H. M. S. Pinafore," which title custom has shortened by leaving off the initials for Her Majesty's Steamship. "Her" is correct, for Victoria was the British majesty at the time the opera was written.

The Alvin will present the Friars Frolic Saturday afternoon and evening.

"Trial By Jury" and "Pinafore" will be the opening program in the Nixon, and it will be presented the first four nights and at the Wednesday matinee. Fay Templeton will be heard in "Pinafore." Friday night and Saturday matinee the bill will be "The Mikado" and the closing offering Saturday night will be "Pirates of Penzance."

For One Day Only

The coming of the Friars, for one day only, will mark the first visit of this revel to Pittsburgh and there will be seen in it a large number of men prominent in the amusement world. Promised to be among them are Walter C. Kelly, the "Virginia Judge," Joe Frisco, famous dancer, Harry Hershfield, cartoonist creator of "Abe Kabibble," Eddie Leonard, noted minstrel, Jans and Whalen, Georgie Price, the two Pat Rooneys, Eddie Miller, Neil Golden and his band and a large group of other entertainers in the vaudeville and radio field.

Local interest in the operatic week will be largely centered in the appearance of Fay Templeton as Little Buttercup in "Pinafore." For a number of years, while she was in retirement from the stage, Miss Templeton was a resident of Pittsburgh, but prior to that she was a well known and popular actress in the musical field, professional associate of the late Lillian Russell, of whom she was a life-long friend. They appeared together in many Weber and Fields extravaganzas, and maintained their intimacy when both became residents of Pittsburgh.

An introduction written by Charlie Chaplin in his own inimitable fashion will preface the book now being written by Bert Levy. Bert is calling it "My Thirty Years on Broadway," and some of the snapshots and photographs he has in his possession are priceless. There are several of Lila Lee and Georgia Price, taken when these two youngsters were just starting with Gus Edwards. An offstage snap of John Drew and one of Edmund Breese are also interesting. Bert says he intends to print snaps he made of Rennold Wolf, Leo Marsh, Bat Masterson, Helen Greene, Paul Armstrong, Irving Lewis, W. E. Lewis, Ashby Deering and others while the Morning Telegraph was in its heyday. And what a heyday!

Our old friend, John Loder, has certainly gone social in London. My dear, he is the leading man at all the smart house parties. He sends me a clipping of the London Tatler with his picture surrounded by the guests of Sir John and Lady Dashwood. Also a view of West Wycombe Park, the Dashwood country place. John Farrow is also one of the sought-after young men who gets invited places. Mr. Loder says there is no hint of hard times in London, the night clubs are doing a thriving business and all the cafes are filled. Perhaps he hasn't met the right people. He is playing a part in Alexander Korda's picture, "Wedding Rehearsal."

Fortunately Sally Eilers will not be disfigured. She starts work on "Walking Down Broadway," May 21, and by that time her bruises and cuts will be healed. No one knows what a narrow escape she had when Eddie Cline's car struck a telephone pole. Plenty of trouble for Sally, all in one night. First a quarrel with Hoot Gibson, her husband, and then the accident. Whether Sally and Hoot patch up their differences by the time this is published, I do not know, but at this writing they are still apart. It wasn't only the argument at the Mayfair, Sally says, but the quarrels they have had on previcious occasions have convinced her they are better apart. Too bad for both of them.

The gayest of all Mayfair parties was the last one, held Saturday night. Every table was filled and over 500 people danced to Earl Burtnett's music. There were many new frocks worn, one of the most stunning being that worn by Virginia Valli, a cream color crepe trimmed with artificial flowers. Mary Pickford wore a new shade of green, a dress she bought in New York. The Countess Frasso was in black with fringe, and that reminds me that fringe seems to be worn again, for Mrs. Johnny Mack Brown wore a white evening dress with fringe. Howard Hughes had a party of 20 and he seemed to be dancing every dance. Marian Nixon, with her dark hair blondined for picture purposes, had an entirely new hairdress. She says she likes being a blonde because it gives her a different personality. Bebe Daniels wore white with fur trimmed coatee to match.

Natalie Keaton and the boy friend, Buster, went stepping the other night to the Frolics. Buster was suddenly buttonholed by a waiter who stared into his face.

"For 16 years," said the waiter, "I have been waiting to getta da good look at you. Everyone say you looka like me.

Buster forgot to play straight and look sad for once. He laughed and the guests at his table joined him. Now everyone is calling the waiter "Buster."

Last Sunday Marlene Dietrich, Josef von Sternberg and Maurice Chevalier and Rudolph Sieber sat on the stands at Marlene's beach house and talked over her troubles with the Paramount studios. Marlene was all for going back to Germany and making pictures, providing Von Sternberg would direct them. Then came some sane reasoning. Von Sternberg realized it would be unfair to keep Marlene off the screen for a year. He learned it would be impossible for her to make another picture for another company and, remembering Rudolph Valentino's tragic experience, he had no wish to subject her to that unpleasantness. There is little doubt that Paramount executives, here in session, helped bring about the reconciliation, perhaps with a compromise on each side.

RUTH CHATTERTON will be on the Stanley screen Friday in "The Rich Are Always With Us," her first picture for Warner Brothers.

Fairbanks States Living in Tahiti Costs $1 a Week

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor [illegible]

HOLLYWOOD, May 14.

YOU CAN LIVE on a dollar a week in the South Seas Islands. Douglas Fairbanks says all else spent above that amount can really be put down to luxuries. A former Olympic athlete actually kept his expenses down to 90 cents per week and never once, while the Fairbanks company was making the picture seemed unhappy or dissatisfied with his surroundings.

At Pickfair, where Mary Pickford has just finished a new wing to the house and where there are treasures gathered from all parts of the world, this conversation sounded incongruous. But it was so interesting we also gathered around Doug to hear him tell his adventures in Tahiti where he went to make exteriors for "Robinson Crusoe in the South Seas."

"How could anyone live on 90 cents a week?" Gary Cooper asked him. Gary, just back from Africa, lived close to nature, shot four lions and carted back dozens of skins, but he didn't find any such economic conditions on the dark continent.

Picked His Food

"My athletic friend," explained Doug, "spent 10 cents for native tobacco which he used in a pipe and in home-made cigarets. He brewed his own orange wine, a very potent beverage, he caught his own fish, lobsters, shrimp, crabs, eels, etc. He gathered oranges, pineapples, avocados, native apples, bread fruit, bananas, mangoes, peanuts, berries, fei and, of course, coconuts. Coffee beans grow wild everywhere and they are pounded and made into a most delicious coffee. He also raised chickens, ducks and pigs that ran wild near the hut he had built himself from bamboo shoots."

"People in Papeete eat practically no meat," said Douglas. "I ate nothing but fish all the time we were in the South Seas. You never miss steaks or veal cutlets because the fish is so delicious and there is such a variety from which to choose."

Suits Are Cheap

"Just a minute," I interrupted, "you have talked all about food, what about clothes?"

"The best suit of clothes, made of the finest linen only costs $3," Doug explained. "The men wear only linen suits and, although I took 10 pieces of luggage, I had to visit a Chinese tailor to have one of the $3 varieties made so I could be in style."

Tom Gerahty tells an amusing story about Douglas and the Chinese tailor. He was handed an expensive suit and told to copy it in linen. When the new suit was delivered Mr. Fairbanks was aghast to find a hole in the sleeve. He sent it back and demanded an explanation. The

RADIO

DONALD COOK and Joan Bennett in "The Trial of Vivienne Ware," radio drama in the Stanley.

Radio, Mystery, Liquor And Thrills of Air All in Week's Films

By MILDRED FILLMORE

YES WE HAVE the radio! Now it has reached the screen, in the form of swift-moving melodrama, "The Trial of Vivienne Ware," which is mystery and thrills, with a courtroom and other atmospheric settings. It's the Stanley photoplay, with that other Bennett gal, Joan, in the title role. It is described as a skillful picturization of an exciting serial of the same title, the background of which is a murder trial of terrific intensity. Photographically, it is said to be novel, too, with unusual shots to emphasize the eerie angle.

Of course, there has to be some laughs to lighten things when they become too serious, and Mr. Skeets Gallagher is the boy who takes care of that for you. The gal of the comedy department is Zasu Pitts. Donald Cook takes care of the romance of this tangled skein and Allan Dinehart, of the stage, is a theatrical and vigorous prosecuting attorney.

The Stanley's stage presentation is a Fanchon and Marco unit idea entitled "Let It Rain," with Roscoe Ates, stuttering film comic.

Not a Forecast

The Penn, with no reference to the weather, will let its customers look at "The Wet Parade," which, we take it, began with "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and will end in Atlanta, if wet let Al Capone testify. This is more melodrama, and it is said to embrace a sort of review of the tippling habits before and after Volstead, with some love and a southern colonel prominent in the proceedings.

Walter Huston is in it as sort of shiftless northern antithesis to that fine drinker, Lewis Stone, the cunnel aforementioned. Dorothy Jordan, Neil Hamilton and Jimmy Durante are in it, too. Durante as a prohibition enforcement officer. There also is a newcomer, Robert Young, as Walter's son, who is said to be a sort of chap you'll like for his acting.

Based on Upton Sinclair's novel, "The Wet Parade" has a background of the life of today as atmosphere of the romantic plot, in which Miss Jordan is the center of dramatic situations. In the cast also are Myrna Loy, Joan Marsh, John Miljan and Emma Dunn.

The stage end of the Penn bill is an elaborate presentation called "Frivolities," the cast of which includes Slim Timblin, comedian.

An Aviation Film

"Sky Bride" is the title of the picture in the Warner. The story—and you may wonder about that—is about aviation, with love getting a break, too. There are aerial thrills and a collision in the air. Jack Oakie and Richard Arlen are the principals, running an air circus at fairs and the like. That fine boy actor, Robert Coogan, also is a featured member of the cast, in which the feminine romantic center is Virginia Bruce.

The Fulton is showing "Amateur Daddy," with Warner Baxter as a bridge engineer who "adopts" an orphaned family and goes along very well as "daddy" until one of the brood

Grand Opera Making Its Way Into Pictures

By MARQUIS BUSBY

Universal Service.

HOLLYWOOD, May 14.

IF YOU PUT your ear to the ground, and that's just as good a way as any to find out what's happening next in Hollywood, you should hear sweet music in the air. No, not just that ha-cha cha stuff or the voice of some crooning tenor wondering vocally where his baby is tonight. This time the screen is going to make use of real music.

It isn't going to be necessary any longer to dress up in a hard-boiled shirt to hear the classic music of Gounod, Mascagni, Flotow, Bizet, and all the rest. You can hear them at your favorite movie emporium. Grand opera is no longer a dream of the future in motion pictures. It's here, and operas are being made right in Hollywood in the historic, old Marshall Neilan studios on Glendale boulevard. The Kendall-Devally Operalogue Company is sponsoring them, and where many mighty moguls of screendom have been afraid to experiment with really good music, this new organization is without the slightest shiver of apprehension.

Is Different

Oh, it's going to be a bit different from the operas you see on the stage but, nevertheless, it will be very much opera. In most presentations of the sort there are long intervals where nothing much happens except a good workout for the sturdy lungs of the tenor and soprano. For motion pictures the operas have been condensed to run no longer than 18 minutes, or two reels. All the favorite arias are retained, of course. The most striking innovation of all is the fact that all operas will be sung in English. Thousands of people will learn for the first time what the basso profundo is making all the fuss about.

Three operas have already been completed. "Martha," that pleasant Flotow gem, will be released this month. Following in order come "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Carmen," "Walpurgis Night," "Lakme" and "Rigoletto." Since these operas have been condensed the company does not regard it as entirely fair to call them by their original names. New names have been substituted. "Martha," for instance, becomes, probably to its own surprise, "Milady's Escapade." "Cavalleria Rusticanna" turns into "Vengeance," and "Carmen" is "The Idol of Seville." "Walpurgis Night" is an interlude from "Faust," and incidentally, as far as I can discover, has never been included in this opera's presentation in the United States. It demands an elaborate special setting of all places, inferno, and a striking ballet. As yet new names haven't been thought up for "Lakme" and "Rigoletto."

Figures and Voices

Conventional sets of the operatic stage have been thrown into the discard and the backgrounds will be in accord with the best motion picture technique. Exterior locations are used when called for. As an instance, there is a stirring, honest-to-gosh hunting scene in "Milady's Escapade." Best of all, for those who like pulchritude with their romance, the familiar overstuffed prima donnas of the operatic stage are decidedly not among those present. These Marthas and Carmens have figures as well as voices.

A terrific amount of intensive work is necessary for these productions. First, the entire libretto of the opera has to be rewritten, condensed down to the required running time and still retain the high lights of the original text, and even more difficult and important are the co-ordinated verbal and musical scripts. Then come at least weeks of rehearsal with soloists, and ensemble singers, ballet and

What's What, Who's Who In Broadway Ballyhoo

By REGINA CREWE

Motion Picture Editor New York American

NEW YORK, May 14.

LAVISH STAGE productions in motion picture theaters continue to amaze that portion of Broadway conversant with the costs of show business. Frequently the theatrical part of the entertainment is featured far more than the film, the picture being almost relegated to its ancient low estate of "chaser." That the public likes these revues is indicated at the box-office. But when it is considered that the shows cost from $15,000 to $25,000 to stage, it seems that the possession of the receipts must be merely temporary.

Last week in the Paramount such stars as Helen Broderick, Frank Morgan and Fred Astaire of the original "Band Wagon" company, headed the "tab" version of that hit. In the same theater this week Lawrence Gray, Frances Williams, Ann Pennington and Harriet Lake are featured in a production of "Everybody's Welcome."

Six blocks up Broadway, in the Capitol, Victor McLaglen, Eddie Lowe, Fifi D'Orsay and Charles Judels, all headliners, appear in a "Cockeyed World" skit, while "The Street Singer," Burns and Allen and Cab Calloway's music makers are on the bill. All this for the usual admission fee beside a fine film attraction in Cosmopolitan's Jackie Cooper-Chic Sale picture, "When a Feller Needs a Friend."

NEW YORK, May 14.

THE NAME of Miss [illegible] Franken bears slightly less significance to the playgoer than the names of Sophocles, Sam Shipman, Ibsen or Philip [illegible].

Yet on a [illegible] humid evening the Franken name blew like an autumn breeze through the wings and auditorium and [illegible] of the Booth Theater where Miss Franken's [illegible] [illegible] with grim [illegible] "Another Language" has [illegible] been performed.

I suspect Miss Franken of being a [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]ingly human [illegible] [illegible] comedies.

Gifted because of her talent for chopping up people and serving them [illegible] is obvious. Human because she has taken a nauseating [illegible] theme, "The Silver Cord," "The Feathered Nest," [illegible] for instance, and endowed it with rich perception, [illegible] and honest humor and 100 per cent credibility.

You might judge from these lukewarm remarks that "Another Language" is a fine play. Even so [illegible] would be understating it a [illegible].

The weeding-out process in the local theater has helped the play to win an audience overnight where in other times it would have been submerged. "Another Language" came in, as the quaint old phrase went, "on rubbers."

An Unknown Arrives

Broadway knew little about the author, for Miss Franken apparently had never contributed to Racing Form or Variety. She had, it seems, confined her efforts to class magazines that had never taken an Anne Nichols manuscript.

However, "Another Language" contrived to get itself produced anomalously under the guiding hand of—a concert impresario. This courageous man, Arthur Beckhard, had evidently never heard the old warning, "Never do a play about commonplace people in the spring," for he displayed an almost demented valor in not only putting it on the stage of a theater lately

Gossip Flying Fast, Jackie Cooper to 'Wed'

By JERRY HOFFMAN

HOLLYWOOD, May 14.

SH-H! HAVE YOU heard? The whispering chorus is at it again. That mysterious "they" are spreading the word over town once more. And the things "they say!"

"Jackie Cooper will elope with Polly Moran . . . Greta Garbo will dive from the City Hall tower into a fountain pen . . . John Barrymore and Marie Dressler will do an adagio on a tight wire across the public square . . ."

Silly? Yes, but no more so than many more serious rumors which drive Hollywood reporters crazy. Every report, regardless of how far-fetched it may sound, must be checked in self-defense, by those who supply the fans with the news about their film favorites.

Come Whispers

Springtime brings the most fantastic whispers of all. If one were to believe all the reports, the few people left in Hollywood who were not considering a divorce are expecting a baby. Mergers, production plans are twisted with gossip about homes and romances. An example of what has kept Hollywood newshawks leg-weary and phone-tired during the past few weeks are among the following, most of which have been proven not only untrue but ridiculous.

"Joan Crawford and Douglas Fairbanks Jr. are separating" . . . Coincident with which is "Joan and Doug are shopping for baby clothes" . . . Or "The Clark Gables are going their separate ways" . . . "Greta Garbo lost all her money in Swedish investments" . . . Then, "Greta Garbo is dead" . . . (That used to be a monthly report about Clara Bow, usually starting in New York.)

Laud Ann, Harry

Denials on the part of the principals rarely are effective. That vague but effective group known as "they" continue to insist . . . And go further to tell listeners that "Charlie Chaplin is going to make a talkie" . . . Then, "No, Charlie won't talk, he'll whistle" . . . "Maurice Chevalier and Marlene Dietrich are oh! so chummy!" All that is necessary for the gossip-hounds is to see Chevalier and Miss Dietrich in conversation at a premiere. The fact that there is a Mrs. Chevalier, also a Rudolph Sieber to whom Marlene is wed, doesn't stop the gossip-hounds.

The finesse and dignity with

Radio Mystery, Liquor And Thriller of Air

begins to fall in love with him. And you know how neighbors talk, don't you? Well that's how they talk in this sentimental comedy that has the sympathetic stuff deeply imbedded. Marian Nixon is the [illegible] and she makes the story good for some dramatic bits. Rita LaRoy, Lucille Powers, William Pawley and quite a few others are in the cast. Kiddies too.

The Aldine on Monday will begin the fourth week of the run of "Grand Hotel," one of "the pictures of the year," which has the greatest name cast ever assembled for a film. It includes Greta Garbo, Joan Crawford, John and Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery and Lewis Stone, all of whom have parts that test their acting ability.

The Davis offering is "The Mouthpiece," a tense [illegible] tion depicting of the career of a blackleg lawyer, a continuation of a run that began the previous week in the Warner. The Sheridan Square on Tuesday will conclude a three-day showing of "Girl Crazy" and will open Wednesday with Buster Keaton in "The Passionate Plumber." This is a comedy, the cast of which includes a couple of other prominent laugh-makers of the screen, Jimmy Durante and Polly Moran. The situations are based on the blunders of Keaton as a bungling plumber who becomes guardian of a beauty.

The Enright film for the first two days of the week will be "The Mouthpiece," referred to above.

In the Avenue Cinema is another Russian film, "The Five-Year Plan," with synchronized explanatory text spoken in English. It recently ran for four weeks in the Central Theater, New York. It is described as "an actual account of the greatest social experiment in the world now being performed by 160,000,000 people in Soviet Russia."

The Harris is closed for the season.

Three Loud Cheers for Pulitzer Prize Award For 1932 Play Heard

It was a musical comedy to end all [illegible] to end all musical comedies.

Not All the Way

They tell me that "Of Thee I Sing" is only a three-quarter-way innovator, too. But here Sam Harris gave his minstrels free rein and here Mr. Kaufman, Mr. Ryskind and the Messrs. Gershwin could fling themselves for all their wit was worth into beamish, unsqueamish, unapologetic travesty and a whirling, scathing nonsense. Here as blandly and blithely as they pleased they had carte blanche to kid the entire nation instead of just themselves.

I decline to measure the success of their ways and means with a Savoyard-stick. The success is certainly there and theirs. This season's Pulitzer award is a happy one, a scarcely arguable one, so smacking is it of relief and release as well as of justice.

The real sum of it is this: that "Of Thee I Sing" is a truly better play plus music than quite any other competing play, with or without. The real wonder is that the judges could forgive it its two or three swell tunes.

Grand Opera Making Its Way Into Pictures

orchestra. There is little cutting after the opera is filmed. These operalogues are shot very nearly to the exact footage.

Some of the principals, although perhaps not very familiar to movie fans, are well known in operatic and musical circles. Elsie Peterson, Danish prima donna, heads the cast of "Vengeance." Renee Denny, the former Mrs. Reginald Denny, is Carmen. Others include Marianne Mabee, William Wheatley, Wayne Davis, Wilda Wray (a sister of Fay Ray), Joan Edwards, Charles Van Der Belen, John Linge, H. Goodell Boucher and a young San Francisco baritone, Jack Howell, who shows promise of following in the footsteps of Lawrence Tibbett.

Antoine De Valley, formerly a prominent Belgian tenor, producer and coach, is the originator of the operalogue idea. Henry F. Kendall, president of the company, is a retired businessman who became interested in this unique motion picture experiment.

BUSTER KEATON out with his "equalizer" in "Passionate Plumber," coming to the Sheridan Square for three days beginning Wednesday.

Gossip Now Flies Fast

which Harry Bannister and Ann Harding handled their separation stunned the whisperers—it left them nothing to say. Meanwhile spring time rumors must have new romance even among unwed couples. Hence, when Jimmy Dunn and Joan Marsh were seen together three times there was sufficient basis for a future wedding in the minds of the gossipers.

Claudette Colbert found it necessary to meet Norman Foster halfway across the continent and spend a day with him to prove they are still happily married. "Hoot" Gibson and Sally Eilers paraded their happiness in each other's company in a rodeo arena to still the sayings of "they."

Oh, this is a hot season for rumors. "They" also say, "but wait!" I must run and see if it is true that Wallace Beery is going to play "Peter Pan."

Gallagher Gets Role

Skeets Gallagher, comedian, returns to Paramount for a leading role in "Merrily We Go to Hell," film version of Cleo Lucas' novel, "Jerry and Joan."

DANCES

LEAH SMITH will be stepping when the Hargreve Frolic, dance review, is presented early in June.

Stage Star In Picture

Helen Coburn, who played in the Theater Guild presentation of "Green Grow the Lilacs," has been signed for screen work by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Miss Coburn, born in Indianapolis, comes of an old New England family, and was graduated from the Knox School in Cooperstown, N. Y. She spent several years as a member of the American Laboratory Theater, working under the direction of Richard Boleslavski. She appeared during this period in Lynn Riggs' first play, "Big Lake," and in Thornton Wilder's only play, "The Trumpet Shall Sound." Her dramatic characterization in "Green Grow the Lilacs" brought her to the attention of picture executives.

One-Act Plays To Be Staged

The Irene Kaufmann Settlement Players will stage "Escape in the Clouds" Tuesday evening, May 24. This play, written by Helen H. Mason, won first award in the recent Allegheny Playwriting contest. During the same evening the group will present "Gun Glory" by Henry V. Vogelsang and "The Man With the X-Ray Eyes," by Walter Framer.

Doug Fairbanks Avers Living in South Seas Costs Only $1 a Week

tailor with difficulty explained the suit given him had a hole and so he supposed Mr. Fairbanks wanted the new suit copied exactly.

In line with everything else, the movies are years behind the times in this primitive Papeete. When the Fairbanks party reached there the inauguration of President Harding was being shown and it was received as a great picture.

First Pictures

The first talkies ever projected in the South Seas Islands were shown by Douglas and his aides. "Mickey Mouse" and other movies carried to the islands gave the white men there as well as the natives something to remember.

French is the language most generally spoken and many of the white men who have gone to the islands have become as indifferent to the outside world as Strickland in "Moon and Sixpence." The heat, the climatic conditions and the distance from civilization are responsible for a lethargy which seems to affect many people.

Doug Friendly

At first when Doug, Edward Sutherland, the director; Harry Ham, Tom Geraghty, the writer; David Rose, Earl Brown and William Farnum started their picture-making, the natives were interested but not particularly helpful. After a while Doug made it a point to go fishing with them, eat with them and to become friends. From that time on they worked with Doug and explained many of their customs which the average outsider never learns.

"The people who go to the South Seas Islands, and are miserable and hate it all," said Mr. Fairbanks, "are the ones who hold themselves aloof and are too bored to really become a part of the life there."

I could write much more. There is the story of the haunted house, the description of the pretty native girls who have been so much a part of all fiction written about this country, etc., etc., but alas there isn't the space.

Odd Hoodoo of Spring Production Is Broken

dedicated to flops, but by directing it himself!

This piece of impertinence has been insufficiently rebuked by the callous public. They have, since the opening, been packing the theater, agencies—believe it if you can—have made "buys," and one of the most successful dramatic properties since "Turn to the Right" has been propelled on a career that promises both length and strength.

Of the merits of "Another Language" outside box-office appeal it is hard to write. So snugly woven is the play's texture that you are apt to forget the score of able details in admiration of the complete pattern. But the simple story of a man-eating mother of the old school, her four engulfed sons and their sardonically embattled wives has been told with a bite and veracity that better-known writers might well envy.

It is a story with tragic implications, especially in the case of the grandson who finds the whole detestable tribe unsympathetic except a young aunt-by-marriage who warms unwisely to his aspirations and personal charm.

Miss Franken knows people too well to imagine that this spurt of fiery particles could ever harden into the "clear, gem-like flame" of which long love is sustained. But her irony is unflaggingly gay, her malice invariably judicious.

A finely tempered company, playing steadfastly for the play's and not the players' sake, gives "Another Language" other values that are pure velvet for the appreciative audience. In fact, since the Hollywood trek set in in earnest three years back, there has been no more interesting acting here than that of Margaret Wycherly as the demon mother, Dorothy Stickney as the sensitive daughter-in-law, Glen Anders as her philistine husband and John Beal as the rebellious grandson.

IN PITTSBURGH'S MUSIC CIRCLE

WANING SEASON BRINGS PLANS FOR NEXT YEAR

Ukrainian Chorus, Efimove To Be Heard; Notables on Future Concert Courses.

By J. FRED LISSFELT

Into the second-hand stores and out-of-the-way antique shops of New York City are beginning to appear [illegible] valuable works of art out of Russia. Pictures from the Hermitage and other collections are being replaced by [illegible] that the Soviet may carry on. At the same time there is an influx of Russian music which seems to have nothing in common with governmental schemes and America is benefiting by these many choruses. Some of the singing groups have been so successful and comfortable in America that they have become part of our musical life. Among these the Ukrainian Chorus under Alexander Koshetz was almost the first to thrill us with its folk and sacred music.

Mr. Lissfelt

In tribute to George Washington this chorus and the Ukrainian Folk Ballet will give a concert and pageant in Carnegie Music Hall next Friday evening. The ballet is directed by Vasile Avramenko, a nation-wide organizer of Ukrainian traditional dance.

HARVEY EFIMOVE

Tuesday night Harvey Efimove will again appear as singing actor in a program of Russian gypsy and Yiddish music at the Young Men and Women's Hebrew Association. This young actor played with important companies in Vienna before his arrival in America and is thoroughly grounded in pantomime and mimicry. Like Victor Chenkin he has specialized in portrayal of pathetic and humor types among [illegible]. His comedy is full of pathos, never ridicule, and with but a suggestion of scenery he attempts to accomplish quickly moving dramas.

Hardly do we say farewell to the concert halls for the season than the billboards flare with the new programs for the coming autumn and winter, and indeed they show stars of such brilliance that we almost regret the vacation season. May Beegle celebrates this season the tenth anniversary of her concert series and flashes before us such names as Jeritza and MacCormack as headliners. Lucrezia Bori returns after many seasons absence. When she last appeared we stood almost alone in admiration of her beautiful singing and playing. Since that night her association with the Metropolitan Opera has proved how finely a great artist may still develop and now she stands at the peak of the more sensational stars who have forgotten how to sing.

Horowitz has a place alone among the younger generation of pianists and comes again as do the Russian Cossack Singers by popular request. Heifetz has been seeing the Orient and far-off countries where music is still a luxury and where he has lured large audiences to his concerts. He is still the masterful technician.

THE ART SOCIETY

Never before has the Art Society presented a more satisfactory group of musicians than in its new prospectus. Lotte Lehman is the loveliest woman in the Vienna Opera and year after year I have watched her Fidelio and her "Marschallin" in Strauss' "Rosenkavalier" and listened to her wholesome and exquisite singing. Schlusnus is an exception among German singers, a German Scotti who can do opera and songs in equally thrilling manner.

No musician is more welcome than Albert Spalding, a rarely accomplished American violinist whose personality and sense of the concert stage together with profound artistry has gained him admirers throughout the musical world. Myra Hess, an English pianist, belies the [illegible] that the British are not musical. She is much the sincere quiet type that we find in Spalding, a classicist of the first rank.

The English singers with John Goss are a new ensemble with the same ideals as the madrigal singers we have often heard here before. And the Art Society remains alone in bringing us high type chamber music in the Pro Arte Quartet.

Ernest Lunt announces that the Mendelssohn Choir will [illegible] the Brahms Requiem during the coming year. Vacation time is not too long for study if we who attend should like to enjoy this monumental work.

Compinsky Trio Concert Tomorrow

Playing their third engagement here in response to popular demand from members of the Y. M. & W. H. A. Musical Society, the Compinsky Trio will give a program of chamber music tomorrow night in the Morris Kaufmann Auditorium.

Heretofore all Musical Society concerts have been held on Sunday nights but due to the lateness of the season, society voted to hold the Compinsky concert on Monday.

The trio, composed of Alex Compinsky, violin, Sara, piano, and Manuel, 'cello, will play an entirely new program.

The program follows:

|---|---|
| Trio in E flat, Opus 40 | Brahams |
| Trio in C major | Gaspar Cassado |
| Trio in A minor, Opus 40 | Tschaikowsky |

SOLOIST

Ellen Van Der Voort

TECH SENIORS IN RECITALS

The first of five recitals by seniors in the Department of Music, Carnegie Institute of Technology, will be given by Miss Ellen Van der Voort, cellist, this evening in the Theater of the College of Fine Arts. The program:

|---|---|
| Suite, 'cello alone | Bach |
| Prelude, Courante, Sarabande, Menuet I and II, Gigue | |
| Scherzo | Van Goens |
| Air | Hure |
| Menuet | Debussy |
| Pavane pour une infante defunte | Ravel |
| Piece en forme de Habanera | Ravel |
| Sonata for Piano and 'Cello | Boëllmann |

UKRAINIAN SONG TRIBUTE FRIDAY

A tribute in song to George Washington will be offered by the Ukrainian Chorus under the leadership of Alexander Koshetz in the joint program of Ukrainian folk songs and folk dances to be given at 8:15 p. m. Friday in Carnegie Music Hall.

The performers, both in the chorus and in the ballet, will be in their colorful holiday costumes.

"A Chant to St. George" will open the musical program. St. George riding on his white charger, who slew the dragon, is glorified by the Ukrainians in religious songs and Prof. Koshetz included this song in the program to indicate homage to Washington whose first name is that of the legendary hero.

The Ukrainian Folk Ballet, led by Vasile Avramenko, will contribute part of the program. The entire performance is offered by the Ukrainian Bicentennial Committee in homage to the memory of the father of the adopted homeland. It will be given in 30 cities of the United States during this month.

Dickinson Prexy Talks Here Friday

Dr. Karl T. Waugh, recently elected as nineteenth president of Dickinson College, Carlisle, will be the speaker at the annual dinner of the Dickinson Club of Pittsburgh, Webster Hall, Friday night.

BOOKED

JERITZA — Maria Jeritza, most conspicuous figure in the Metropolitan Opera Company, who early in the autumn will give a concert at Syria Mosque.

JASCHA HEIFETZ TO PLAY HERE AFTER 2 YEARS

Violinist to Appear on Tenth Anniversary Bill Of May Beegle Concerts.

Jascha Heifetz, violinist, returns to Pittsburgh next season after an absence of two years as one of the celebrities in the course of May Beegle concerts at Syria Mosque. Since Heifetz last appeared here he has made a world tour. While he is still under 30 he stands on artistic heights that few have ever reached.

Other attractions in this course for which the greatest artists and personalities have been assembled in celebration of the 10th anniversary of May Beegle concerts are Maria Jeritza, the glamorous prima donna of the Metropolitan, who comes on Friday evening, November 11; Lucrezia Bori, another leading artist of the Metropolitan, who will give a costume recital of Spanish, French and English songs for which her costumes will be made in Paris this summer. Bori will come on Friday evening, December 2, followed by another Spanish celebrity on Saturday evening, January 7, Escudero, the great Spanish dancer, assisted by Senoritas Carmita and Carmela.

Then comes John McCormack, America's favorite tenor, on Thursday evening, January 26. McCormack returns after an absence of five years. Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, will be heard on Friday evening, February 3. The closing concerts on Tuesday evening, March 14, brings the return of the Don Cossack Russian Singers under their dynamic leader, Serge Jaroff.

Whitehill, Baritone, Quits Metropolitan

NEW YORK, May 14.—(INS)—Clarence Whitehill, for 17 years a leading baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, began a talking picture career today with an attack upon the management of the opera.

Announcing he was leaving the opera permanently, Whitehill advised the retirement of Giulio Gatti-Casazza, general manager.

At present, the star declared, the opera is being run more as an Italian theater than an American organization. He charged the opera stars were told "to act, not sing."

Mickey Walker All-Time Great On Boxing's Roll

Former Champion Destined for Mellow Memory Among Fistic Fans.

By DAMON RUNYON

(Copyright, 1932, Universal Service, Inc.)

The ringworms of this generation will be bragging to their chillun of Mickey Walker.

"Huh!" they will be saying. "You talk about great fighters! Why, Walker as a welterweight licked Mike McTigue the light-heavyweight champion, Harry Greb through 15 thundering rounds.

Damon Runyon

"Why," they will be saying, "Walker as little more than a middleweight spotted Jack Sharkey, the leading heavyweight contender of the day, 25 pounds and fought him 15 rounds to a draw decision, a decision that was a robbery of Walker. Then Mickey spotted King Levinsky, a heavyweight who had just got through beating the mighty Dempsey, 23 pounds and give him a pasting.

"Yes," they will be saying, "and before that Walker went into the ring in no condition with 200-pound Bearcat Wright, a rough, tough Negro, and got off the floor to give Wright a pounding in 10 heats. And Walker, in no condition, got off the floor in Louisville five times to outstruggle Paul Swiderski, another fair sort of heavy. He was welterweight champion, and middleweight champion, and he was only 5 feet 7, and never weighed over 175 pounds in condition.

"You talk about great fighters?" the ringworms of this generation will be saying to their chillun. "Go 'way, you make me tired! You never saw Mickey Walker, so what do you know about great fighters?"

Real Fame Ahead

It will take a lapse of years to furnish fistiana with a true estimate of Walker's ability. We are too close to him now. I saw Stanley Ketchel and Sam Langford, and Abe Attell when they were good, and I realized they were good, but I did not realize that I was seeing three of our all-time greats. It was only after I saw them in retrospect that I appreciated their true merit as gladiators of the roped arena.

Walker, I think, on his accomplishments of the past 14 years, must be rated with the all-time greats, no matter what happens to him in the future. With the first five or six all-time greats, I doubt if any other man now in the ring will be so rated. But, because of his nearness, I suppose the chroniclers of current fistic history will continue to discount Walker until he has passed from the stage of current events. 'Tis ever thus.

Walker as a welterweight champion undoubtedly was one of the greatest titleholders in the history of that division. As a middleweight champion, I doubt that he ranked with Bob Fitzsimmons or Stanley Ketchel. But on his career as a whole he must be ranked with either or both those fighters.

Close to Ketchel

Ketchel, at the middleweight limit, might have whipped Walker. It would have been a great fight. But Ketchel, at his highest poundage, could scarcely have whipped the Walker of today. Ketchel couldn't lick two of the good heavyweights of his time—John Arthur Johnson and Sam Langford.

I do not say that Walker could have licked either of these, but Walker has beaten two of the best heavies of his own period in Sharkey and Levinsky. Not to speak of half a dozen other heavies of the trial horse variety. I would say that pugilistic history must rate Walker along with that great little Englishman of a bygone day, Charley Mitchell, who weighed around 150 pounds, yet fought the mighty John L. a 39-round draw in the mud at Chantilly, France.

The old-timers tell me Sullivan was a pretty good fighter, especially under the London prize ring rules which prevailed in his fight with Mitchell. James J. Corbett licked Sullivan when John L. was one of those "hollow shells," and Corbett came to be acknowledged a great fighter, so Mitchell must have been good.

Has Fine Defense

The secret of Walker's success is the very thing for which he gets practically no credit—boxing ability. He has a remarkable defense against blows aimed at his chin and body. He has the arms and torso of a 190-pound man, and he takes most of the punches thrown at him on his arms and shoulders.

When Walker gets through with a fight, you will observe that his arms and shoulders are covered with black and blue marks, and that's the proof of his defense. The popular impression of him is that he is strictly a slugger. As a matter of fact, he does about as much blocking and slipping of punches as any man in the business. He bobs and weaves a lot, and he always is on his toes and moving.

It is his trick of crowding in to work on an opponent's body that makes it appear that he is a slugger. But always he is moving in well covered up. He fights with both hands. His left hook is his best weapon, but he has a good right. He is a very fast counter puncher. All in all, there is mighty

BRANDT STARS IN 7-TO-6 WIN OVER CHICAGO

Pitcher Checks Rally in Ninth By Retiring Three Bruin Sluggers in Row.

Berger Clouts Triple With Bases Full; Urbanski Hits Timely Home Run.

CHICAGO, May 14—(AP)—Dutch Brandt stepped in with a brand of super-relief pitching today to halt a Cub rally and save a 7 to 6 victory for the Boston Braves. The victory pushed the Braves within two games of the pace-setting Cubs in the National League race.

The Braves broke a five-all deadlock at the expense of Charley Root, who relieved Burleigh Grimes at the start of the ninth inning, on a home run by Bill Urbanski, a hit and stolen base by Walley Berger, and a long drive to center by Schulmerich, which scored Berger. The Cubs retaliated by driving Socks Seibold off the mound with a double by J. Moore and a single by Riggs Stephenson, which scored one run and left the tying one on first with none out.

Then Brandt was called. He delivered by forcing Hartnett to force Stephenson and followed through by striking out Grimm and Bill Jurges.

The Cubs twice came from behind in the game, which saw a parade of five Boston and two Cubs pitchers. After the Braves scored twice in the opening inning on three successive hits, a fielder's choice and a wild pitch, the Cubs drew four straight walks from Brown and Frankhouse for one run. In the second, they went ahead when English singled to score Richbourg and Grimes. Berger's triple against the left field wall with the bases loaded sent three Brave runners home in the sixth, only to have the Cubs tie the score in their half of the inning on three hits—a single by Grimes, a triple by Richbourg and a single by Herman, after two were out.

The victory today gave the Braves the series, two games to one. The score:

OLD MATES BEAT DODGERS

CINCINNATI, May 14—(AP)—Former Brooklyn players enabled the Cincinnati Reds to salvage the final game of the series of three with the Dodgers as they set the pace for a 5-to-3 victory today.

Ernie Lombardi made a double and two singles and Babe Herman doubled in the seventh to send Grantham home with the run that put Cincinnati ahead to stay. Glenn Wright had tied the score with a homer with one on in the sixth. The score:

Time of game—2:02.

DONAHUE RELEASED

BOSTON, May 14—(INS)—Pete Donahue, righthanded pitcher, was unconditionally released this afternoon by the Red Sox. Donahue came to Boston from the Kansas City team of the American Association. He was once with the Cincinnati Reds and the New York Giants.

PRINCETON TOPS YALE

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 14—(AP)—Princeton won its first dual track victory since 1925 over Yale today, 80 to 55, taking first place in nine of the 15 events. New meet records were set for the discus throw, 220-yard dash and 440-yard dash.

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOONS OF LAST SUNDAY: THE MAN WHO SPLIT THE WORLD IN TWO—Alexander VI (Rodrigo Lenzuoli Borgia) was elected to the papacy on August 12, 1492, a few days after Columbus had sailed on his great voyage of discovery. This Pope's incumbency coincides with the greatest extension of the papal power. Such was the authority of the Roman Pontiff over the secular kings and sovereigns of the earth that, at the solicitation of the Spanish kings, the Pope promulgated a most astounding document, his famous Bull, on May 4, 1493. In it he drew a line from Pole to Pole, distributing all the lands and seas recently found, or to be found thereafter, between two rulers, the King of Spain and the King of Portugal. The Alexandrine Line literally split the world in two. It affected the fate of three continents and that of millions of people inhabiting them. Incidentally, it gave the territory of the United States and Canada to Spain, while Nova Scotia and Newfoundland fell to the share of Portugal. "From mere liberality we give, concede and assign (donamus, concedimus et assignamus) to you forever all the islands and lands" evokes a strange echo in the twentieth century. Yet, as recently as 1895, the state of Venezuela used the Papal Bull as an argument in her claim to part of British Guiana before an International Tribunal.

DERBY WINNER BEATS TICK ON IN HOT FINISH

Boatswain, Outsider, Sets Pace Most of Route Only to Be Overtaken in Stretch.

Crowd of 40,000 Sees Bradley Star Cop by Neck-Length; Sande Is Fourth.

By DAMON RUNYON

(Copyright, 193[illegible] [illegible] Inc.)

PIMLICO, Md., May 14.—Well, suh, the Kunnel's hoss done done it! Yes, suh! Burgoo King is the Kunnel's hoss—Kunnel Bradley of Ol' Kaintuck—and the way Burgoo King won the Preakness this afternoon was something to warm the cockles of your heart, suh!

Earl Sande

He came from pretty well back and on the outside in the last few hundred yards to win by a skimpy neck from Tick On and Tick On won by a skimpier neck from Boatswain.

There they were, those three horses, Kunnel Bradley's, Mrs. Kaufman's and Walter Jefford's, so close together as they thundered to the wire that a bed sheet would have covered the trio.

What a race it was, my countrymen!

BOATSWAIN SETS PACE

Little Eugene James, who rode Burgoo King in the Derby, was again astraddle the beautiful chestnut son of Bubbling Over today, and he rode a great race. Col. Bradley himself was not here, staying in New York to see another of his horses run. The compliments of Gov. Ritchie and the Woodlawn vase that goes with the victory were received by Dick Thompson, the Bradley trainer, who has won more Derbies than any other trainer but never before a Preakness.

Boatswain, a son of Man O' War, led in the journey of a mile and three-sixteenths from the barrier to the head of the stretch. He broke on top and was first going past the stand the first time with Tick On a close second and Lucky Tom a very long shot third. Burgoo King was pretty well back.

MAGNIFICENT FINISH

At the first turn, where many a Preakness has been decided, Boatswain was still in front and Hanford began driving his mount to a lead of several lengths. Tick On closed in quickly, however, and, going down the backstretch, James moved Burgoo King up to third.

Rounding the far turn Burgoo King moved up to second, back of the flying Boatswain, a 15-to-1 shot.

It looked as if Boatswain might last it out, but swinging the turn into the stretch he went away wide. Robertson promptly moved Tick On up on the rail side of

Rain Scores Clean Sweep In Pirate-Giant Series

By CHARLES J. DOYLE

John J. McGraw and his flag-hunting New York Giants left Pittsburgh for Cincinnati last night sadder and probably wiser men. But the New Yorkers had nothing to show for their three-day visit to our fair city after the third scheduled contest with the Pirates, like the two previous games, had been called off on account of rain and wet grounds.

The New York and Pittsburgh athletes in full battle array were in the middle of a snappy workout yesterday afternoon when a light drizzle fell upon Oakland. The ball orchard already was a bit damp from the previous rains and the appearance of a 2 o'clock drizzle caused the home management to announce its fifth postponement in succession. The game was moved back to Wednesday, July 6, when it will help to make up a doubleheader.

The unmatched run of postponements also brought some sort of a record or a near record for the opposing clubs. Had a battle been staged a new light attendance mark for a Giant-Pirate game on Saturday surely would have been established. About 200 fans had gathered around the park when the announcement was made and play probably would have brought out less than 1,000, which would have marked a new "low" in matters of this kind. The sun came out strong almost immediately after the game was called off.

The latest twin bill entered on the Pirate ledger means that the Buccos face seven doubleheaders in the Oakland Orchard with May only half done. Before the season is over the crop of dual attractions probably will have reached a new peak.

The New York players finished their batting drill after the game was canceled. Most of McGraw's players left the field, but the Pirates partook of a long workout. The dark clouds started to break shortly after the game was called. It is true a game could have been played, thus doing away with a future double bill, but there did not seem to be any demand for the attraction. Even the umpires seemed to be glad when the game was called off.

The Pirates left for Brooklyn late last night. Gibby's team is slated to meet the Dodgers in a single game at Ebbets Field this afternoon. Both clubs will hurry back to Pittsburgh to open a four-game series at Forbes Field. The first game is carded for tomorrow afternoon.

Manager John McGraw, of the Giants, was peeved over the calling off of the game. McGraw's dissenting vote, it is said, was due to the 13 postponements which have been brought into the New York schedule, only one of which has been played off.

The long run of wet weather made a marked impression on Jack Fogarty, who has been groundkeeper at Forbes Field for 21 years. Fogarty and his helpers have put in some busy sessions since last Monday. Jack said the past week provided the wettest spell he has noted in his long term of service at the Oakland Orchard.

Two Strikes 'n' Out—Penn State Wins Experiment

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., May 14—Penn State bested Dickinson College in a close game here today, 5 to 3.

By agreement between the rival coaches, Joe Bedenk, of Penn State, and Joseph McCormick, of Dickinson, only two strikes and three balls were permitted the batter, instead of the customary three strikes and four balls. The experiment, tried with the object of shortening the game and speeding up the play, resulted in the contest being completed in 1 hour and 25 minutes.

Both coaches declared themselves in favor of the innovation after the game. Bedenk plans further experimentation with the idea. The score by innings:

| | | R. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Dickinson | 0 0 0 1 0 2 0 0 0 | 3 | 4 | 6 |
| State | 1 1 1 2 0 0 0 0 * | 5 | 6 | 3 |

Pipgras Scores Second Shutout as Yanks Win

NEW YORK, May 14—(AP)—George Pipgras, veteran Yankee hurler, pitched his second shutout in a row today, blanking the Chicago White Sox, 6 to 0, in the only game of the series the weather let the teams play.

It was a brilliant performance that carried Pipgras' streak to 19 scoreless innings and the Yankees to their fifth straight victory. Until two were out in the ninth the Sox got only two hits, both in the fourth inning. Then Pipgras eased up, gave two hits and walked a man to fill the bases. In that tough spot he forced Red Kress, moved to the cleanup position for Chicago, to fly out and end the game.

Thanks to Earle Combs, the Yankees had the lead all the way, but Sad Sam Jones made a pitchers' battle for six innings. Combs, the first batter up for the Yanks, lifted the ball into the rightfield bleachers for a home run.

Up to the seventh, the Yanks got only two more blows. Chapman walked to start the inning, Dickey singled and Lazzeri was passed to fill the sacks. Frank Corsetti came up and brought the first two home with a single. Pipgras beat out a bunt to load the corners again and Combs finished the rally with another single for two more runs.

The Yanks scored their other run in the eighth, Pipgras driving [illegible] home with a single. The score:

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., May 14—Parkersburg High School won the [illegible] annual West Virginia high school track and field championships here this afternoon with a total of 36½ points, nosing out [illegible], which scored 35[illegible].

The winner of the meet was not decided until the finish of the mile relay, final event on the program, and only three points separated the first three places.

Parkersburg's victory was scored on the smallest number of points of any team in the 14-year history of the state track meet. Likewise the five-hour rain here this morning kept any records from being broken during the semi-final and final sessions for the first time in history. During the two-day session only one record was changed, that being the medley relay mark, which was lowered two-fifths of a second in the quarter trials yesterday.

Donald Barnum was high scorer for the meet with 14½ points gained through firsts in the javelin and shotput, seconds in the discus and shuttle hurdle relay team. Dayton of Moundsville was second in individual scoring with 11½ points.

Competition for the championship was close and one team then another held the lead at various stages of the meet. Charleston, many times the champion, placed third with 33½ points. Moundsville was fourth with 24 points, and Huntington, champion of last year, came in fifth with 21 points. This is Parkersburg's fourth state track championship.

Tourney at South Hills Heads Week's Golf Card

STATE BODY'S ONE-DAY TEST IS HEADLINER

College, Women's, Club and Fraternal Events Also On Attractive Program.

By TOM BIRKS

Headed by the Pennsylvania State Golf Association's one-day tourney at the South Hills Country Club on Wednesday, an interesting program of tournament play is offered local men and women devotees of the links this week.

Fraternal club and international competition will hold the interest of golfers locally and nationally.

Tomorrow at the Country Club of Pittsburgh the Sons of the American Revolution will stage their opening tourney of the season. The University of Pittsburgh and Duquesne University golfers are to meet at the Highland Country Club on Tuesday, and the same day finds quite a list of scholastic matches carded.

Local professionals should keep in mind that Tuesday is the last day for filing entries in the national open. The qualifying round will be played at the Oakmont Country Club on Monday, June 6.

MANY TOURNEYS WEDNESDAY

On Wednesday the cream of the amateurs will compete in the P. S. G. A.'s one-day affair, and while the men are doing their best to break par over Walter Loeffler's layout, the women will be busily engaged in a one-day tourney at the Allegheny Country Club and a medal play tourney at the Country Club of Pittsburgh. Mrs. Lee Hemingway, chairman of the women's committee at Chartiers Heights, has announced a golf breakfast for that day, and the women members of Valley Heights also will hold their first one-day tourney of the season.

Thursday offers no competition, but the women's team matches will be resumed on Friday. Section 1 will be at the Pittsburgh Field Club, where Oakmont will start defense of its title. Section II will be at the Westmoreland Country Club, and in inter-collegiate golf Penn States clashes with Cornell, at Ithica, N. Y.

On Saturday the American and British women's team matches will get under way over the Wentworth course, and the usual Saturday matches will be played.

GOLF CLINICS PLANNED

Golfers all over the country are awaiting the establishment of the golf clinics proposed for various parts of the country by the executive officers of the Professional Golfers' Association. According to the official announcement there will be a clinic to enhance in a three-fold manner a professional's value to a club, instruction to be offered in club making, greenkeeping and teaching.

The object is to make the professional of more value to his club, and give him something more than tournament play in which to become interested.

Club making is virtually a lost art. The local body of the P. G. A., the Tri-State Golfers' Association, has a rule that before any new applicant can be considered he must have served three years apprenticeship on the bench—and that means club making.

REQUIREMENTS CHANGED

But since the steel shaft became the vogue 95 per cent of all clubs used or stocked in a club are of that variety, so it can readily be seen that the wizard who can shape and fashion a hickory shaft no longer is in demand.

All that is to be done today is to attach heads to steel shafts. So much for club making.

Greenkeeping is an art that requires many years of study and practice before perfection can be reached and no one can be expected to visit a golf clinic and return home an expert greenkeeper. As for golf instruction, about 97 per cent of the pros take this work seriously and devote their time to it without stint.

With all of the proceeds going to the Welfare Fund, the Edgewood Country Club will hold a women's one-day tournament on Monday, May 23.

All women golfers are invited to play in the tourney, and a fee of $1 will be charged. Entries should be made by calling the Edgewood Country Club, Churchill 2024.

Edward E. McCoy, chairman of the Caddie Welfare Committee, has invited the Caddiemasters' Golf Association to the Longue Vue Country Club for a dinner at 6 o'clock Tuesday evening. The annual meeting will be held, officers elected, and tournaments scheduled for the coming season. All former members and new applicants are invited to attend.

PITT VICTOR; DUKES BEATEN

Pitt flashed brilliant form to score a 4-2 triumph over Notre Dame at the Highland Country Club, and Duquesne bowed to Villanova, 5-1, at Alcoma in a match that was much more closely contested than the score would indicate in college golf matches here yesterday.

In conquering Notre Dame, until last week undefeated in 26 matches, the Panthers avenged a defeat which they suffered at the hands of the Irish last season. The Duquesne-Villanova competition marked the first meeting between the golf teams of the two institutions, and also marked the first time that any Villanova team ever has appeared in Pittsburgh.

PANTHERS IN FINE FORM

The Panthers rose to unexpected heights in taking the measure of the South Benders. Regis Wolff, captain of the Blue and Gold, turned in a sparkling 77 in downing William Redmond, Irish ace, 5 and 4, and Charles Wolff, also of Pitt, carded a nifty 78 in annexing a 2-and-1 triumph over J. Montedonico. Vincent Fehlig had the best medal score of the visitors—a 79—and gained Notre Dame's only win in the man-to-man dueling.

The shot-making of the Duquesne and Villanova linksmen was equally brilliant, and in the matter of close dueling this competition was the superior of the two. After touring the course in a sparkling 76 William Kelly, Villanova ace, found that he was all even with Francis Totten, Duquesne captain, and had to go an extra hole to gain a 1-up decision. Although he carded a 78 Joe Cornely, another visitor, had to go to the home green to down Eugene Patrizio, 2 up.

BAUGHMAN STARS

John T. Byrnes, Pittsburgher who captains the Villanova team, lost to Peter Baughman, 2 and 1, as the latter turned in a medal score of 78. Byrnes had an 81, the highest medal score of any contestant. The summaries:

PENN OARSMEN TOP HARVARD, NAVY, M. I. T.

Quaker Crews Win Varsity, Freshman and 150-Pound Events; Columbia Victor.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 14—(AP.)—Pennsylvania's varsity completed what its lightweights started in the quadrangular regatta here today and whipped Harvard, Navy and Massachusetts Institute of Technology to give the Philadelphia crews three of the four events.

The Quakers took a substantial jump at the start which was cut down by the Cambridge crew until the Philadelphians won by only a quarter of a length.

Three lengths behind the Crimson came the Navy, which led the Engineers by seven more.

The victory gave Pennsylvania the varsity, 150-pound and freshmen events, while the Navy won the junior varsity race. All were rowed over the choppy waters of the Severn, whipped by a stiff wind.

COLUMBIA VICTOR

NEW YORK, May 14—(AP.)—The Columbia varsity crew, beaten in its two previous starts by the Navy and Yale, today won from the New York Athletic Club eight over a mile and a half course on the Harlem by seven lengths. The Lions' time was 7:32.

The Columbia alumni crew, composed mostly of the Blue and White oarsmen of the great 1929 eight which won at Poughkeepsie, defeated the Lion lightweight eight by one and one-quarter lengths in a mile race.

It was an impressive showing by the graduate group, which is preparing for the Olympic trials at Worcester, Mass., in July.

U. S., French Tennis Stars in Even Break

PARIS, May 14—(AP.)—The United States and France broke even in the first two matches of their team tennis series today when Marcel Bernard, acclaimed the best of the younger French players, defaulted to Gregory Mangin, because of an injured knee while leading, two sets to one.

Bernard was leading 6-1, 4-6, 6-1, 13-12, when his injury made further play impossible.

Sidney B. Wood, Jr., Wimbledon champion and a member of the United States Davis Cup four last year, was defeated by Andre Merlin, 8-6, 7-5, 4-6, 6-1, in the first singles.

Wood and Mangin play Bernard and Christian Boussus in doubles tomorrow.

GAME'S GREATEST STARS COST LITTLE

AS SOMEBODY ONCE [illegible] a baseball player [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] judged by the [illegible] As a matter of fact it appears that [illegible] are to make good.

For this reason [illegible] are keeping a close watch [illegible] priced rookie of the [illegible] San Francisco for $65,000 [illegible] come through, but [illegible]

Recently the Sox traded Chalmer Cissell to the Indians. When Cissell was obtained from Portland the price was $25,000 and players valued at $48,000 more, but though he was tried at second, third and shortstop he could not be made into a satisfactory regular. It was finally given up as a hopeless job.

THE GIANTS PAID [illegible] that he would ever [illegible] price was [illegible] in excess [illegible]

Fred Schulte cost the B[illegible] $80,000 and was touted as a future [illegible] St. Louis he has [illegible] than [illegible]

A LOT OF money was paid for Larry Lazzeri, but he didn't click. The failure of Mule? O'Leary here after the Pittsburgh club's outlay of $22,500 is a recent piece of [illegible] is well remembered. Many others who brought fancy figures were poor investments. Some [illegible] it is true. Lefty Grove's price topped $100,000, while Paul Waner cost $80,000, and it can't be said that they're not worth all that was paid for them and more. A few others also came through, but in the great majority of cases players bought for staggering sums were disappointments.

Lloyd Waner didn't cost the Pirates a dime. Eddie Collins had to go around begging for a job. Lou Gehrig, Frankie Frisch, Carl Reynolds, Cy Williams, Herb Pennock, Ted Lyons, Eppa Rixey, Pete Donohue, Tom Zachary, George Uhle, Joe Vosmik, Wes Ferrell, the Sewells and others were obtained from the college ranks or off the sand lots and cost nothing. The price is no indication of a ball player's value.

Following Thursday's [illegible] the Flatbush troupe, the Rovers will go to St. Louis for four games and to Cincinnati for three, returning May 27 for eight games here with the Cardinals, Reds and Cubs before the first eastern trip.

TOMORROW'S GAME WILL give Pittsburgh fans their initial opportunity of greeting Max Carey in the role of a manager and getting a look at the reconstructed Dodgers, with Hack Wilson as the leading new figure in the cast. The absence of Wilbert Robinson alone, after 17 seasons at the helm, would have been enough to keep the Brooklyn club from looking like the same old outfit, but even aside from that it's a much changed outfit. Of the 1931 regulars only Glenn Wright, Lefty O'Doul and Johnny Frederick remain, the four others having been supplanted by Wilson, George Kelly, Joe Stripp and Tony Cuccinello.

Chocolate's right to be ranked as the best drawing card among the smaller boxers can't be disputed. Shows featuring him have drawn a total of $1,650,000. How much he has saved is not known, but there is plenty of evidence that he has prospered. When he made his first trip to this country four years ago his entire wardrobe was on his back. When he landed again recently he had five trunks.

British golf cups have a habit of drifting over to this side of the Atlantic. America has held the Walker Cup ever since it was presented in 1922. The British open mug has remained here since 1924. The United States has won the Ryder Cup twice in the last three contests, and even the British amateur trophy has been captured by Americans twice in the last six years. And no American golf trophy has gone abroad since Ted Ray won the United States open in 1920.*

To gather what that means you have only to reflect that it's almost two feet better than the old world record. The figures may have been exaggerated, but at least Doulda did well enough to make it clear that he spells more than trouble in an event that the United States has lost only once in nine Olympic meets since 1896. The lone rival to win it was V. Porhola, of Finland, in 1920.

The wrestling card offers two finish matches and three preliminaries limited to 30 minutes each. Gino Garibaldi, the Italian who eliminated Frank Speers from the picture in the most recent show after the former Georgia Tech star had been on four successive cards here, is in the main bout against John Maxos, the Greek, who met Strangler Lewis in the first show of the season. Wee Willie Davis of Virginia and Howard Cantonwine of Iowa are in the other match to a fall. Hans Steinke of Germany and Rudy Dusek [illegible] meet in the feature preliminary. Steve Znosky of Boston, a favorite with the fans, returns against Tom Marvin of Oklahoma, and Paul Harper of Texas opens the show against Roland Kirchmeyer, formerly of the University of Oklahoma.

CHAMPIONS TO SHOW

While all of this activity is going on, the fans are looking ahead to a series of three straight outdoor boxing shows in the district featuring world champions in the main bouts. The first of these comes in the opening card of the Meyers Bowl in North Braddock one week from next Monday, when Battling Gizz of Donora gets his chance against Tony Canzoneri, the lightweight king, in a non-title bout, to be followed in the same ring a week later by that by-public-demand match between Jackie Fields, the welterweight champion, and Ted Yarosz, of Monaca, undefeated throughout his professional career. In between, in its second show one week from next Thursday, the Hickey Park management will offer Johnny Jadick of Philadelphia, world junior welterweight champion, against Herman [illegible]

Many of the amateur clubs in the district will stage outdoor shows during the season, the Twenty-seventh Ward A. C. of the North Side, the Lorenz? A. C. in the East End and the Sandy A. C. of Uniontown among them.

REPEAT DERBY WIN IN PREAKNESS

Burgoo King became one of a select few thoroughbreds to win both the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness when he nosed out Tick On in the latter feature at Pimlico yesterday. Tick On was the favorite in both races and finished fourth in the Derby.

It wasn't certain Burgoo King would start today until the track dried out. And not many horsemen thought the horse good enough to stand the trip from Kentucky and still win. Presently they will commence to see that Burgoo King is a fair sort of steed. It is something to win that double crown, anyway.

Speaking of the times, as most everybody seems to be doing, there didn't seem to be any economic stress at Pimlico this afternoon. They say there was 42,000 paid admissions last year. The mob today looked larger.

CURTIS SEES RACE

The stands and clubhouse were jammed. You could scarcely move along the lawn in front of the stands when the first race of the day, a steeplechase, came on. The spectators came from all over Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania and New York. Not to mention Washington, D. C., which always makes a semi-official holiday of the Preakness.

Vice President Curtis, who used to be a jockey, was present, of course. He is one of the regular customers of Maryland racing. Gov. Ritchie of Maryland was present. Also Admiral Cary T. Grayson. The John Hay Whitneys represented New York society. Edward Seagram of Canada, owner of the Seagram stable, was on hand.

It was a gay crowd and a betting crowd. The pari-mutuel windows under the stand were busy all afternoon. Howard Hayes, a Baltimore man, rushed up and bought the first $10 ticket on the Preakness. He chose Lucky Tom. The only scratches from the big race today were Portam and Marmion.

The track dried out fast after the rain and [illegible] condition [illegible] the Preakness [illegible]

NEW YORK, May 14.—(AP)—Top Flight, C. V. Whitney's 3-year-old filly, which was the champion 2-year-old last year, galloped to a 10-length victory here today in the Acton Stakes for fillies at Belmont Park. Top Flight ran the mile eased up in 1:39.

Sonny Workman had the Whitney filly away winging and just coasted home looking back at Parry, which took the place from Vogue by a nose. It was Workman's fourth winner of the day.

BLOOD CELL PROTEIN SERUMS
Any diseased condition of the body that the blood can reach can be profitably treated by this method. Any condition in which the blood itself is changed or altered. We know that the blood undergoes certain changes in acute conditions; the fever is highest in the blood. In all infectious diseases the germ of it (toxin) is found in the blood. In conditions where there is a loss of function, such as diabetes, nephritis, etc. In all conditions of the nerves as seen in neuritis, neuralgia, etc. In all lowering of the body forces it will be found that there is a loss of alkalinity of the blood. Therefore, most chronic conditions can be relieved by Blood Cell Proteins.

SALE OF ICE TEAM LIKELY

OTTAWA, May 14—(AP)—Redmond Quain, solicitor for the Ottawa club of the National Hockey League, today said negotiations had been opened with Chicago interests for the sale of the franchise and its transfer there.

Quain would not reveal the names of the Chicago parties interested. Reports were that James Norris, wealthy grain dealer of Chicago, was one of the chief negotiators. Norris applied for a franchise for St. Louis at the recent National League meeting in New York, but the application was turned down. Norris is reputed to be a backer of the Chicago Shamrocks, of the American League.

Reports here were that if Maj. Frederick McLaughlin, head of the Chicago Blackhawks, would agree to another team in his district, Norris would drop the Shamrocks.

Noted Horses to Vie In Benefit Show Here

Closely following the entry of Mrs. W. P. Roth, famous California horsewoman, a number of entries for the annual Allegheny Country Club horse show, which will be held June 2, 3 and 4 in the Sewickley ring for the benefit of the unemployed of the county, have been received at the show headquarters in the Fulton Building.

The second to announce her intention of exhibiting her string is Mrs. Simon T. Patterson, Pittsburgh sportswoman, who will have present her famous hunters, Prince H and Thundercrash, two thoroughbreds which have taken down a large number of honors throughout the east and middle west. George Reese Patterson, her son, will show his pony, Blackie, and her daughter, Miss Nancy Louise Patterson, will be up on her two, the hunter, Doctor Bonero, and the saddle mare Gay Girl.

The Eden Hall Farm, Gibsonia, has entered a string of six, five in the saddle class and one in the five-gaited class. Those entered by the Eden Hall Farm are Casa Del Rey, Renata, Belle Rex, Cassandra and Dora Lee, saddle class, and Ramona, in the five-gaited.

Miss Mary Louise Flinn's entry, Fitzmaurice, will appear in the pony competition, and Miss Elizabeth C. Boyd, of Edgeworth, has entered her dark bay mare, Vixen.

Two additional classes are included in this year's show, one for polo mounts and the other for polo teams of 3, both of which are expected to bring out a large number of entries, particularly from local polo enthusiasts. In the polo mounts class the animals are to be judged on manners, speed, handiness and confirmation, and the riders for correct polo attire. A cup and ribbons are to be given the first four places.

Nationally known judges will be in the ring during the six sessions of the three-day show, which will be held morning and afternoon. Mrs. John Gerken, of Brooklyn, New York, will judge the harness horses and ponies; Claude L. Pemberton, of Elizabethtown, Ky., will judge the 3 and 5 gaited saddle horses and saddle pony classes; Lewis E. Waring, of New York, and Isaac H. ## DODGE EXHIBIT OPEN TO PUBLIC

Through its world-wide dealer organization Dodge Brothers Corporation has renewed its invitation to tourists to visit the Transportation and Equipment Exhibition at the Dodge Brothers plant in Detroit this summer.

The display, said to be the largest permanent show of its kind in the world, has proved a big attraction to persons interested in the automobile industry. More than 30,000 visitors have been registered since the show opened in January, 1931.

The exhibition occupies an entire floor (55,000 square feet) in the assembly building of the plant and houses a complete line of Dodge passenger cars and trucks.

750 AUTO MEN HERE FETED BY PARTS COMPANY

Garage and Service Workers Guests at Party Given By Penn Avenue Firm.

More than 750 of Pittsburgh's garage and service men gathered as guests of the Superior Motor Parts Company at 5614-20 Penn avenue Wednesday for an evening's entertainment. An abundance of good things to eat and drink were available throughout the evening.

A talking picture entitled "The Endless Channel," featuring the accuracy and precision with which Perfect Circle piston rings are manufactured, greatly impressed those present.

The guests were further entertained with a monologue by C. J. (Reds) Campbell, of the Westinghouse Lamp Company, who kept those present in an uproar with his many witticisms. Frank Searle of the Perfect Circle Piston Ring Company, delivered an instructive talk.

The affair, under the able management of H. T. Fisher, general manager for the Superior Motor Parts Company, assisted by every one of this progressive firm's employes, was one of the best attended events of its kind ever held in Pittsburgh and will be long remembered by those present.

W. W. Martin, president of the Superior Motor Parts Company, was greatly elated over the success of the evening's program.

Spring Inspection Urged for Autos

Every motorist should go over his car carefully at this time of the year. The winter often imposes severe strains on an automobile. Rutted roads may have put the wheels out of line. Anti-freeze should be drained. The radiator should be flushed, the cooling system cleaned and new grease put in the transmission and the rear end. These little jobs pay for themselves in longer car life, and smoother operation.

Rockne '65' Setting Hill Climb Records

Hill climb records are being set by the Rockne "65" in many parts of the country. Uniontown Hill, Uniontown, Pa.; Ft. George Hill, New York; Bell Hill, Austin, Tex.; Negley avenue hill, Pittsburgh, and others have been negotiated easily in high by this new car.

MARMON CASH POSITION HIGH, REPORT SHOWS

Assets Placed at More Than Double Current Liabilities; Refinancing Is Completed.

Completion of a refinancing program involving more than $2,425,000 which greatly improves the financial position of the Marmon Motor Car Company and enables it to maintain its high standing in the automotive industry, has been announced by G. M. Williams, president, coincident with the publication of the company's annual report.

This refinancing has been accomplished through the co-operation of creditors, half by five-year 5 per cent debenture notes and half by the common stock of the company.

The successful culmination of this refinancing again places the company in a creditable financial position notwithstanding the fact that, as a direct result of the unfavorable general business conditions that prevailed prior to and during the past year, the company showed a substantial loss and was further impaired by a general write-down of its assets.

The balance sheet of the company shows a total net worth as of February 29, 1932, of $3,061,217.33, including 7 per cent preferred stock in the amount of $1,000,000 and a common stock equity of $2,061,217.33.

The company showed total current assets as at February 29, amounting to $1,400,891.78, with total current liabilities amounting to $617,477.66.

The reconstructed position of the company and important adjustments and economies made in its manufacturing and sales activities are such as to insure sound and progressive operations in the future, Mr. Williams said.

"Our two lines of automobiles, the Marmon eight introduced earlier in the year, selling in the $1,400 price field, and the Marmon 16, are meeting with widespread acceptance on the part of both dealers and retail buyers.

"Our entire manufacturing, sales and executive operations have been consolidated in the most modern of the company's several plants and all activities have otherwise been co-ordinated for maximum efficiency and economy. The distributor and dealer body is being constantly augmented by the addition of new representation in important centers."

The feature picture will be "The County Fair," starring Hobart Bosworth, Ralph Ince, Marion Shilling, William Collier, Jr.

It offers [illegible] the [illegible] of peanuts and popcorn, hot dogs and [illegible]. And before [illegible] the eyes, each in [illegible], for it is a [illegible] bit of real human emotions.

The story [illegible] and it has the advantage of skilled direction and a talented cast. Hobart Bosworth, as a race-horse-owning colonel, plays one of the big human roles of his [illegible] career. Marion Shilling as his daughter is at her best. And as the menacing gambler who won't play square on the circular track we have Ralph Ince, the director and actor.

Then there is William Collier, Jr., son of the inimitable stage star, playing the role of a handsome young cabaret [illegible], although in reality he is an expert jockey with an uncanny knowledge of horses and humanity.

This is a harmonized story with every element of the average human emotions somewhere in the skein of the plot. The old colonel owns a promising horse, but he is having plenty of trouble trying to pay [illegible] feed bill. The crooked [illegible] has his money down [illegible] the home and plans to [illegible] the colonel's favorite or [illegible] or buy him.

Of course he can't buy him [illegible] the colonel [illegible] and the jockey [illegible] action that is magnificent.

SOMETHING NEW

Just recently we introduced a startling new product to our sales organization. It represents the last word in refinement and service. It has completely revolutionized our sales organization, making it possible for our dealers to earn more money than any other sales organization in the country. Mr. Mahan of this organization earned $3,640 for April, besides winning an automobile as a prize. Mr. Fitzgerald has earned so far this month $488. Mr. MacKay earned $376 yesterday. The Pittsburgh Branch had the largest month in April that they have had in over 18 months. Our program is being backed up by a national advertising campaign. That, together with our large clientele, makes it possible for us to furnish our dealers with a number of qualified leads. We teach you how to sell. No financial investment required. We can offer valuable franchises to a limited number of neat appearing, hard-working men over 25 years of age. References will be required. This is a money maker for the right man. If you are really desirous of working and believe that you can fulfil the above requirements, call Monday, 10 a. m. to 4 p. m., at 201 Law and Finance Bldg., 429 Fourth Avenue.

STRUCTURAL Engr.—Designer, exec. type. COBY Service, Bessemer Bldg.

THE Fuller Brush Co. offers immediate employment to (2) married men; steady income; residents of Beaver, Butler and Allegheny counties preferred. Call or write 800 Bessemer Bldg. at once.

Today's Decisions Determine Your Future Success

"Be Sure You're Right, Then Go Ahead."

When a man steps out in the morning to find a position, too seldom does he realize that what he does that day may influence his entire life. Too seldom does he appreciate the fact that HE holds the key to SUCCESS or FAILURE. He should realize in the first place that the success of the employe depends largely on the progressiveness of the employer or firm. A spring can rise no higher than its source.

The correct method for securing profitable employment is this: First, find what organizations are in the market for men, then analyze these firms carefully and choose a SUCCESSFUL one.

Our organization can prove to the satisfaction of everyone that we have progressed continually for the last ten years in spite of general conditions. We can show a payroll made up of men who are making more money NOW than they did when conditions were at their best. So fundamentally true are these assertions that, rather than retrenching, we are broadening the scope of our activities. That is why WE CAN USE EIGHT MORE MEN AT ONCE. OUR FIRM IS IN EVERY SENSE OF THE WORD PROGRESSING. OUR MEN ARE SUCCEEDING. What more need we say to men of at least average intelligence to convince them that we may have what they have been seeking for in vain, steady, pleasant and PROFITABLE employment with a FUTURE.

If you are neat, industrious and considerate of your own welfare, you are eligible for one of the positions we have open. If you have read and understand the logic of this advertisement, your intelligence is sufficient to warrant your acceptance.

We will be prepared to interview you personally on Monday from 9 to 12 or from 1 to 3 p. m.

INDIANA, SALTSBURG — A Sun-Telegraph Motorlogue

Today's motorlogue of 118 miles traverses prosperous farming country in a setting of wooded-green hills and fertile valleys. There are few railroads, towns or mills to break the succession of pleasing rural views. There is even a noticeable absence of roadside gas stations.

The first stop is Indiana, home of one of the state's largest teacher colleges. The next stop is Saltsburg, where is located Kiski College. This town was named for its early salt industry and is at the confluence of the Conemaugh, Loyalhanna and Kiskiminitas rivers.

DODGE EXHIBIT OPEN TO PUBLIC

Through its world-wide dealer organization Dodge Brothers Corporation has renewed its invitation to tourists to visit the Transportation and Equipment Exhibition at the Dodge Brothers plant in Detroit this summer.

The display, said to be the largest permanent show of its kind in the world, has proved a big attraction to persons interested in the automobile industry. More than 30,000 visitors have been registered since the show opened in January, 1931.

The exhibition occupies an entire floor (55,000 square feet) in the assembly building of the plant and houses a complete line of Dodge passenger cars and trucks.

A display of earlier models built by the company is included, offering an interesting contrast between past and present in automobile construction. Of historical interest is the 1916 touring car used by the staff of Gen. Pershing in the Mexican expedition after the bandit, Villa.

750 AUTO MEN HERE FETED BY PARTS COMPANY

Garage and Service Workers Guests at Party Given By Penn Avenue Firm.

More than 750 of Pittsburgh's garage and service men gathered as guests of the Superior Motor Parts Company at 5614-20 Penn avenue Wednesday for an evening's entertainment. An abundance of good things to eat and drink were available throughout the evening.

A talking picture entitled "The Endless Channel," featuring the accuracy and precision with which Perfect Circle piston rings are manufactured, greatly impressed those present.

The guests were further entertained with a monologue by C. J. (Reds) Campbell, of the Westinghouse Lamp Company, who kept those present in an uproar with his many witticisms. Frank Searie of the Perfect Circle Piston Ring Company, delivered an instructive talk.

The affair, under the able management of H. T. Fisher, general manager for the Superior Motor Parts Company, assisted by every one of this progressive firm's employes, was one of the best attended events of its kind ever held in Pittsburgh and will be long remembered by those present.

W. W. Martin, president of the Superior Motor Parts Company, was greatly elated over the success of the evening's program.

Spring Inspection Urged for Autos

Every motorist should go over his car carefully at this time of the year. The winter often imposes severe strains on an automobile. Rutted roads may have put the wheels out of line. Anti-freeze should be drained. The radiator should be flushed, the cooling system cleaned and new grease put in the transmission and the rear end. These little jobs pay for themselves in longer car life and smoother operation.

Rockne '65' Setting Hill Climb Records

Hill climb records are being set by the Rockne "65" in many parts of the country. Uniontown Hill, Uniontown, Pa.; Ft. George Hill, New York; Bell Hill, Austin, Tex.; Negley avenue hill, Pittsburgh, and others have been negotiated easily in high by this new car.

MARMON CASH POSITION HIGH, REPORT SHOWS

Assets Placed at More Than Double Current Liabilities; Refinancing Is Completed.

Completion of a refinancing program involving more than $2,425,000 which greatly improves the financial position of the Marmon Motor Car Company and enables it to maintain its high standing in the automotive industry, has been announced by G. M. Williams, president, coincident with the publication of the company's annual report.

This refinancing has been accomplished through the co-operation of creditors, half by five-year 5 per cent debenture notes and half by the common stock of the company.

The successful culmination of this refinancing again places the company in a creditable financial position notwithstanding the fact that, as a direct result of the unfavorable general business conditions that prevailed prior to and during the past year, the company showed a substantial loss and was further impaired by a general write-down of its assets.

The balance sheet of the company shows a total net worth as of February 29, 1932, of $3,061,217.33, including 7 per cent preferred stock in the amount of $1,000,000 and a common stock equity of $2,061,217.33.

The company showed total current assets as at February 29, amounting to $1,400,891.78, with total current liabilities amounting to $617,477.66.

The reconstructed position of the company and important adjustments and economies made in its manufacturing and sales activities are such as to insure sound and progressive operations in the future, Mr. Williams said.

"Our two lines of automobiles, the Marmon eight introduced earlier in the year, selling in the $1,400 price field, and the Marmon 16, are meeting with widespread acceptance on the part of both dealers and retail buyers.

"Our entire manufacturing, sales and executive operations have been consolidated in the most modern of the company's several plants and all activities have otherwise been co-ordinated for maximum efficiency and economy. The distributor and dealer body is being constantly augmented by the addition of new representation in important centers."

Akron Powered With Richfield Gasoline

The world's largest lighter-than-air craft, the U. S. S. Akron, now completing its first transcontinental flight to join the Pacific fleet maneuvers, is powered by Richfield gasoline, it became known here yesterday. Richfield also powers the two speedy planes that followed the great dirigible as it headed southward from its home port and attaching themselves to the swinging trapeze beneath the Akron were hoisted into the hangar within the big craft.

The completion of the Akron's voyage will add a new laurel to the long list of outstanding power performances in racing and distance flights which Richfield has achieved.

Ford Motor Output Shows Steady Gain

DETROIT, May 14.—(Universal)—Current and apparently widely circulated rumors that the manufacturing program of the Ford Motor Company has struck an unexpected snag are controverted by facts.

SOMETHING NEW

Just recently we introduced a startling new product to our sales organization. It represents the last word in refinement and service. It has completely revolutionized our sales organization, making it possible for our dealers to earn more money than any other sales organization in the country. Mr. Mahan of this organization earned $1,491.93 for April, besides winning an automobile as a prize. Mr. Fitzgerald has earned so far this month $506. Mr. Mackey earned $75 yesterday. The Pittsburgh Branch had the largest month in April that they have had in over 15 months. Our program is being backed up by a national advertising campaign. That together with our large clientele makes it possible for us to furnish our dealers with a number of qualified leads. We teach you how to sell. No financial investment required. We can offer valuable franchises to a limited number of neat-appearing, hard-working men over 21 years of age. References will be required. This is a money maker for the right man. If you are really desirous of working and believe that you can fulfil the above requirements, call Monday, 10 a. m. to 4 p. m., at 301 Law and Finance Bldg., 429 Fourth Avenue.

STRUCTURAL Engr.—Designer, exec. type. COBY Service, Bessemer Bldg.

THE Fuller Brush Co. offers immediate employment to (3) married men; steady income; residents of Beaver, Butler and Allegheny counties preferred. Call or write 605 Bessemer Bldg. at once.

Today's Decisions Determine Your Future Success

"Be Sure You're Right, Then Go Ahead."

When a man steps out in the morning to find a position, too seldom does he realize that what he does that day may influence his entire life. Too seldom does he appreciate the fact that HE holds the key to SUCCESS or FAILURE. He should realize in the first place that the success of the employe depends largely on the progressiveness of the employer or firm. A spring can rise no higher than its source.

The correct method for securing profitable employment is this: First, find what organizations are in the market for men, then analyze these firms carefully and choose a SUCCESSFUL one.

Our organization can prove to the satisfaction of everyone that we have progressed continuously for the last ten years in spite of general conditions. We can show a payroll made up of men who are making more money NOW than they did when conditions were at their best. So fundamentally true are these assertions that, rather than retrenching, we are broadening the scope of our activities. That is why WE CAN USE EIGHT MORE MEN AT ONCE. OUR FIRM IS IN EVERY SENSE OF THE WORD PROGRESSING. OUR MEN ARE SUCCEEDING. What more need we say to men of at least average intelligence to convince them that we may have what they have been seeking for in vain: steady, pleasant and PROFITABLE employment with a FUTURE.

If you are neat, industrious and considerate of your own welfare, you are eligible for one of the positions we have open. If you have read and understand the logic of this advertisement, your intelligence is sufficient to warrant your acceptance.

We will be prepared to interview you personally on Monday from 9 to 12 or from 1 to 3 p. m.

At PACKARD. . . .

OUR USED CAR POLICY

THE commonly accepted idea is that the Used Car is worth what you can get for it. Nothing could be further from the truth. The same method of measuring values should be applied to a used car as is applied to a new car. The unused miles left in a traded car should definitely determine its value.

We, the Packard Motor Company of Pittsburgh, in 1927 inaugurated a rather unique method of merchandising traded cars.

When the car is traded, it is given immediate mechanical inspection and such repairs are made as to insure its next owner of satisfactory service. Speedometers not altered. On each car a tag is placed giving the name of the former owner so that if the prospective buyer desires additional information he is at perfect liberty to communicate with the former owner.

We invite your inspection of our splendid stock of traded cars. You will be amazed at the Dollar for Dollar value we can give you. And, remember, our closest friends are the thousands of customers with whom we have dealt.

"Ask the man who owns one."

Conference Here to Name Date for Washington Bicentennial Stamps

Hawaiian Stamp

Plans for the special Pittsburgh cachet to be sponsored by the Sun-Telegraph Stamp Collectors are whipping into shape. A date late in June is tentatively set but the actual day will be selected at a conference to be held this week which will be attended by a representative of the Chamber of Commerce, Postmaster Anderson and J. D. Hoit, co-operating advisor for the Stamp Collectors. In the meantime, members are requested not to send in any envelopes for this cachet which will commemorate Washington's activities in the Pittsburgh and Western Pennsylvania area until the definite date is announced in these columns.

Many members of the Stamp Collectors availed themselves of the opportunity to get another commemorative cover for their collection through the Alexandria, Va., cachet of Thursday for the dedication of the Washington Masonic Memorial.

REGULAR MEETING

The political unrest that seems to be prevailing about Hawaii since the Massie trial conviction and pardon and the clamor that has resulted for tightening control of the islands by the United States government has spurred the interest in stamps of this country. Collectors are [illegible] trying to fill in the open spaces in their collections of Hawaii [illegible].

The Philatelic Society of Pittsburgh will hold the regular bi-monthly meeting in the William Penn Hotel tomorrow night at 8 p. m. R. R. Dickson will exhibit his quite complete Plate Number Block Collection of United States Commemorative Issues. Those interested in stamps and stamp collecting are cordially invited to visit this interesting exhibit.

Arrangements are under way for a stamp exhibition to be held at an early date in Youngstown under auspices of the Mahoning Valley Stamp Club of that city.

EXCHANGE THRILLS

Members are getting quite a thrill out of the Sun-Telegraph Stamp Exchange. One member write:

"I have a collection numbering nearly 3,000 stamps, mostly foreign and my exchange envelope of 50 stamps brought me three new ones for my collection. This well repaid me for the effort."

If you are a member of the club you are permitted to send to the Stamp Exchange Department, Sun-Telegraph, 50 of your duplicates for which you will receive in return a packet of equal number. The stamps you send must be clean with no United States ones, two-cent envelope or postcard stamps. Be sure to inclose a self-addressed envelope for the return packet.

If you are not a member of the Sun-Telegraph Stamp Collectors and want to join, send in your application with 50 canceled stamps of any country or denomination. You will then be forwarded a membership card. Address Secretary, Stamp Collectors, Sun-Telegraph, Pittsburgh, Pa. This gives you the privilege of submitting your stamp problems to Mr. Hoit at his home, 139 Hoodridge drive, Pittsburgh, Pa. Also in instances like this inclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

MR. BRUIN JOINS THE SUN-TELEGRAPH "SCISSOR CIRCUS"

Watch the Sunday Sun-Telegraph each week for other "Scissor Circus" animal designs. Save each animal you make until you have a complete circus zoo.

Follow These Directions

1—Paste the design on stiff paper or light cardboard, and cut around the outside of the design with scissors.

2—Fold along the head of Mr. Bruin (marked by white dots) so top and bottom are side by side. You will then have a "Scissor Circus" Bear.

3—To make it stand firmer you can fasten with a paper clip at top or strengthen by running a piece of toothpick through both sides.

4—To color, follow the instructions given below.

Mr. Bruin is a droll fellow and can be taught to do a lot of clever tricks—when he is fully tamed. But don't ever let a bear hug you. They have long, shaggy hair, clumsy feet and bodies, but can run very fast for a short distance over rough ground. There are several kinds of bears, including the white Polar bear of the Arctic regions. The European brown bear and the American black and cinnamon bear are the kind you most often see in the circus. The bear family is widely distributed throughout the world, yet, strange to say, Africa, which abounds in wild animal life, has no bears. South America has only one species. Now go ahead—cut out Mr. Bruin and color him just as you would expect to see him in the circus.

By FRANK C. REISS
Technical Director, Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild

The closing date of the second Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild competition is midnight, July 1, 1932. On or before that time all coach models must be registered at the Guild state or district receiving headquarters in order to be eligible for the awards totaling $?,000. Therefore it is quite important that the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph chapter members of the Guild allow enough time to construct a strong, substantial shipping box and transport the coach to the receiving headquarters.

You may deliver your coach model in person to your state headquarters if you desire. In such a case it will not be necessary to build one of the special containers described in today's lesson, provided you call again for your model at the close of the judging. When coaches are delivered in person they should be packed in a strong cardboard box for ease in handling.

Here are instructions for making a simple and strong shipping box.

Almost any box or crating lumber may be used. The stock should be about ¾-inch thick. Boards that have been matched or joined together with tongue and groove are suitable. The sizes of the various parts of the box are shown in the accompanying sketch.

The sides, bottom and ends should all be nailed together with 8-penny or 10-penny nails, which may be dusted with powdered resin to prevent pulling out. The top should not be nailed on, but rather screwed down with a dozen or more flathead wood screws about 1¼ inches long, size 13 or 14. Countersink the screw heads level with the board. Screwing on the top prevents damage to the coach through the driving of nails and also makes it easy for the judges to unpack and repack the box.

The sketch shows how the coach is held securely in place in the box. The weight of the body is supported on the two center blocks "D." The top of each block is fitted with sponge rubber, felt or pads made of cotton or cloth. The total height should be such as to have the body weight entirely taken off the undercarriage.

The blocks "C" should be just long enough to fit snugly between the front and rear wheels. This prevents coach rolling forward or backward. Nail or screw the cleats securely to the floor board.

Supports for the front and rear axles at "A" and "B" are intended to relieve any strain on the axle shafts. They should be made of such a height as to just carry the weight of the undercarriage.

Locate points on the box sides opposite the hubs. At these points nail the blocks "F." Pad these with rubber, felt or cotton so that the coach wheels will fit tightly between pads. This will keep the coach from moving sideways.

A block and pad "G" is fitted to the under side of the top board so that the pad hits on the top of the coach with a light pressure. To find out the amount of space between the top of the coach and the top of the box, set the coach in the proper position in the box on cleats or supports "D." Drill a small hole through the top board in the center. Place the cover or top on the box. Through this hole measure with a piece of wire or a thin stick the distance to the coach top. Subtract the thickness of the top board. The remaining distance is the space to be filled with block and padding "G," which, however, should be thick enough to exert a slight pressure on the coach top at all times.

The two end boards are reinforced with ¾x1½-inch cleats. This not only strengthens the box but also forms convenient hand grips for carrying.

The pole (tongue) may be fastened to one of the sides of the box as shown in Guild manual or it may be placed on the bottom of the box between the two supports "D." Slide the back of the pole in the notch at bottom of support "A." Padding placed between the blocks "D" will keep the front end of the pole in place.

Whatever you do, fill all space between the coach and the box walls with pads of some soft substance such as cloth, or excelsior wrapped in cloth, so that the model cannot move in any direction.

SUGGESTIONS

Do not mount the coach on a baseboard or other mounting device.

Have the pole (tongue) detached from the coach.

Do not send the coach with a glass protective case.

Do not pack the coach in loose excelsior, hay or similar materials. These tend to scratch painted surfaces.

Do not have your name stamped, printed or painted on your model.

Do not pack the model until paint has dried thoroughly.

Do not add any extras, such as horses, canopies, etc.

A piece of waxed paper applied to surfaces which come in contact with rubber or other padded supports will keep the paint clean, and help prevent possible sticking of pads to paint.

Pads of excelsior, paper, etc. wrapped in fine tissue or waxed paper should be placed between parts that are apt to strike against each other and around the sides and end of the coach so that it will be held securely in place in the box. This is important.

A piece of wrapping paper over and around the model will help to keep it clean.

FATHER COX'S FARMING TOWN SITE SELECTED

Estate on Kittanning Pike Chosen as First Unit in Project to Help Needy.

Father Cox announces that he has obtained the Joseph [illegible] estate on the Kittanning pike for the first unit of his proposed farming community [illegible]. This estate [illegible] 32 acres with a 15-room residence in good condition and various buildings. The site was selected on account of the fertility of the soil and the availability of the location to transportation, 12 minutes from East Liberty.

Father Cox

The 32 acres will be divided into one-quarter acre garden tracts, each one of which will be assigned to a needy family. He expects to accept applications for approximately 120 families for this unit of Coxtown. [illegible]

A number of [illegible] came to Pittsburgh 10 days ago to attend the funeral of Father Cox's mother. Mr. Mason has consented to remain here for several days and supervise the breaking of the ground and the early planting of these family gardens.

MATERIAL OFFERED

The sponsor for Coxtown has been offered approximately 100,000 used bricks and all of the lumber from a business building recently torn down in the business district and this will be employed for the construction of small, two-story shelters on each of the gardens. Father Cox was in conference with experts yesterday on sanitation.

The first announcement of the selection of the Kittanning pike estate for this enterprise was made in one of the Father Cox radio broadcasts yesterday and he was immediately flooded with requests for reservations.

Within a day or two the first ground will be broken.

RESULTS SHOWN

In the meantime the Father Cox-Sun-Telegraph Home Delivery Drive is showing satisfactory results, the funds from this activity going a long way to feed the lengthy breadline that congregates every day at Old St. Patrick's.

If you want to help this "father of the jobless" at a time when he most needs help, at a time when the problem of feeding thousands of hungry men, women and children is more serious than ever, clip the order blank on this page and send it in today. You'll not only get a GOOD newspaper, but you'll have the personal satisfaction of giving your personal aid to a worthy cause. Send the subscription blank to Father Cox if you wish.

If you are living in a city or town where there is no home delivery of the Sun-Telegraph, write to the subscription department, Sun-Telegraph, Pittsburgh, Pa., for mail subscription rates and state in your letter you are interested in the Father Cox fund.

PEONY PLANTS NEED UTMOST PLANTING CARE

Beds Should Be Dug Two Feet Deep, Roots Covered Up During First Winter.

By EDWARD C. VICK
Sun-Telegraph Garden Editor

Why do my peonies fail to bloom? That is the question often repeated at this season.

Mr. Vick

The first consideration is proper planting. The bed should be dug to a depth of 18 to 24 inches, that is for most plantings. In commercial plantings the ground is deeply plowed and allowed to settle. The roots should be planted with the uppermost eye or bud from two to three inches below the surface. The greater depth only in light soil.

USE BONE MEAL

For fertilizer use only a handful of bone meal, well mixed with the soil for each plant. [illegible] and are planted in the spring, but experienced gardeners prefer to plant in September or October. When the ground is frozen, put a mulch of leaves, straw or manure to prevent winter thawing during the first winter. The autumn after planting and each succeeding autumn, work in a little bone meal around each plant.

Some gardeners use and recommend a topdressing of commercial sheep manure applied in the spring following autumn planting. My experience with peonies is never to use stable manure about them at any time. A little peat moss worked carefully into the soil in autumn with bone meal has been safe and satisfactory.

For spring planting roots are dug the previous autumn and kept cool and damp over winter. The plants should not be disturbed by division in the spring.

Peonies are benefited by frequent cultivation. In dry seasons in early spring water will be needed.

In the autumn, as soon as the foliage begins to brown, cut down the stems close to the ground and promptly burn stems and foliage.

Peonies should not be planted in the shade of near trees or shrubbery. If in the lawn the sod should be kept well away from the plants. The peonies need for themselves all the food and moisture the soil contains.

IMPROVE SOIL

In hard soil or subsoil the ground becomes soggy, holding water for a long time. In dry weather it bakes and poor results may be expected. The remedy is to improve the soil by adding sand or better soil or plant elsewhere.

Too deep planting is often the cause of failure to bloom. The crown of the roots should be just below the surface. Divisions from diseased roots should never be used.

Bud rot, which is Botrytis blight, is difficult to control. Spraying with Bordeaux mixture some have found helpful. Remove the plants and burn them is the safe treatment.

Grand Monarch of Grotto Sees Upturn in Business

More boosting and less pessimistic propaganda will "knock depression" out of existence, said Charles E. Minsinger, grand monarch of International Organization of Grotto as he got off the train in Pittsburgh to attend a special monarch ceremonial and reception in Pittsburgh Tuesday night.

Grand Monarch Minsinger is a former Pittsburgher, now a building contractor in Portland, Ore.

Traveling from Texas through the south before coming to Pittsburgh Saturday he is convinced that a gradual improvement in conditions is evident. He said:

HOW TO SPRAY GRAPE VINES

The first spraying should be given grape vines when the buds are swelling for black rot and flea beetle. Use bordeaux lead. The second spraying is applied when the shoots are one to four inches long and before the buds open, using bordeaux lead for flea beetle, black rot, white rot, mildew and anthracnose.

The third spraying is due when the shoots are 9 to 12 inches long before the blossoms are out, using the same material as before.

The fourth spray of the same material is applied when the blossoms are three-quarters off for leaf folder, root worm, berry moth, mildew and rot. Make the fifth application just before the grapes touch each other on the bunches.

Roses Need Early Dose of Fertilizer

Feed roses early. Give each plant a good dressing of commercial sheep or cattle manure. That is the material to start them on and it is needed early while the plants are making growth. In about two weeks a chemical fertilizer may be applied.

Help for Replanting House Hydrangeas

Hydrangeas in pots and which have been in flower in the house may now be carefully removed from the pots and set out in a sunny spot in the garden.

Prepare the soil, dig the hole, then knock the rim of the pot on the edge of a firm surface and the ball of roots will come out intact. Set carefully in the hole, firming the soil well. Water thoroughly.

Just before severe frosts in autumn dig the plants and re-pot in good rich soil.

Insects Transmit Disease to Plants

The disease known as "aster yellows" is transmitted to the plant by several insects including the leaf hopper, blister beetle and [illegible] leaf plant bug. These have not been successfully controlled by plant sprays or dusts.

Cheese cloth houses are now made to completely cover the beds where asters are grown to produce fine flowers. The cheese cloth is supported on wooden frames high enough to permit the gardener to work in an upright position in the bed.

Mix Lime in Soil For Pink Hydrangeas

Adding a little lime to the soil used for potting hydrangeas is the method practiced by Joseph S. Merritt, a large Maryland grower of hydrangeas. It is the use of lime in the soil that enables the plants to produce pink flowers.

To produce blue flowers a teaspoonful of powdered alum is mixed with the soil for a 6-inch pot.

Merritt was awarded first prize for hydrangeas at the four last national flower shows.

Nature Does Her Part

The ground has been dry—now it is well filled with moisture. The weather has been cold—now it is warm. Plant all varieties of plants now—tomatoes, cabbage and all the rest—and they will probably not even wilt. Tomato plants, 25c per dozen, $1.50 per hundred. Cabbage plants 25c per 25, 75c per hundred.

All the tender vegetables may be planted now—beans, corn and all the other garden truck that tastes so much better when you pick it fresh. And it isn't too late to plant onions, lettuce, beets and radishes, which usually are planted earlier. Good seed is very important and Beckert's have a reputation to maintain. Don't forget to use some fertilizer in the row where the seeds are planted and wouldn't it be well to consult us about the best method of doing this?

Is it possible that you will pass through this summer without picking flowers of your own raising? Do you know the joy of seeing fresh flowers on your own plants in the early morning? Have you experienced the delight of snipping them off and arranging them attractively in your own home? If you haven't, you still have much of the joy of life ahead of you. Beckert's seeds are good. You buy satisfaction with every package of Beckert's seeds, and our clerks have a store of knowledge gained from long experience which will be of service to you.

This ad-writer got his experience from the soil and added to it from a swivel chair. He has enough knowledge of the subject to realize that there is still much to learn. During the past week he went out to spade his garden after it had rained all day. The rich, friable soil turned over like well rotted saw-dust. No, he didn't plant seeds the same evening—that would have been very foolish. But there was an air of "I told you so" as he saw each spadeful of earth (which would have been mud in most gardens) fall apart as only soil well filled with vegetable matter can do when it is wet. Just two years ago this garden spot was a mass of sticky yellow clay. There's a heap o' satisfaction mingled with the joy of achievement. Would you like to have a garden like this? There's no secret about it. Bring in a sample of your soil and let us advise you.

In our Poultry Department—light breed chicks at $7.50 per hundred, heavies $8.50. Ducklings 5 for $1.00, $18.00 per hundred. Kurtz Bros. White Leghorn Pullets, 6 to 10 weeks old, 25c to 60c each.

"Black Leaf 40" for Aphis, Thrips and other sucking insects on all kinds of fruit trees and most vegetables. You'll see it advertised elsewhere on this page. The Government recommends this for these pests. We carry it in stock. 1 oz., 35c; ½ lb., $1.25; 2 lbs., $3.25; 10 lbs., $12. Postage extra.

We have a good assortment of lawn mowers very reasonably priced.

BRIDAL DAYS HERE AGAIN WITH ARRIVAL OF MID-MAY

Young Society School Horses— —To Star in June Show

Miss Bertha Brooks Miss Althea Robinson

Social Affairs Assume More Romantic Tone With Approach of Cupid's Month Of Blushing Brides and Blooming Roses

By PATRICIA PITT

Bridal days are here again with the arrival of mid-May, and will become more and more bridal with the approach of the month of brides, romantic June.

Yesterday in the East a Sewickley man became the husband of a New Haven (Conn.) girl, who spent a fortnight in Pittsburgh last summer, and of course she has many friends here now.

The bride was Janis Elizabeth Peix, daughter of Mrs. Charles H. Peix, of New Haven, and the late Mr. Peix, formerly Mayor of New Haven, and the bridegroom was William Woodward Guthrie, of New Haven and Sewickley.

The ceremony took place in St. John's Episcopal Church, decorated with Easter lilies, spandragons and apple blossoms against a background of cibotium ferns and bamboos.

The bride wore white satin in the Empire mode with pearl embroidery and a veil of tulle and old lace and carried lilies.

Mrs. Felix B. Snowdon, of Pittsburgh, sister of the bridegroom, was matron of honor. She wore corn colored chiffon with a brown straw picture hat, and carried yellow spring flowers and blue delphinium. Annette Hayes, of New Haven, maid of honor, chose a gown of peach chiffon, fashioned with brief, puffed sleeves and a cape and having the girdle of peach chiffon lined in blue satin.

The bridesmaids, Mrs. Jack B. Peix and Frances Jacobson, of New Haven; Mrs. William O. Hickok IV, of Harrisburg, and Mrs. George Van Cott, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y., wore similar gowns of blue chiffon having the girdles lined with peach satin, and had Juliet caps

Greensburg Girl Married to Man From Cleveland

In the First Presbyterian Church, Greensburg, Ruth Browneller, daughter of the Carroll Brownellers, and Frank A. Myers, of Cleveland, were married yesterday.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a quaint gown of beige embroidered net over beige satin, made with a tight fitting bodice, brief, puffed sleeves and a long full skirt. Her large hat was of beige horsehair trimmed with peach petals. She carried Johanna Hill roses.

Mrs. J. H. Williams, of Greensburg, as matron of honor, wore pale pink chiffon, fashioned with a long full skirt and a cape, and a pink horsehair braid hat, and carried pink roses and blue delphinium. Mrs. Eugene Myers, of Aurora, O., sister-in-law of the bridegroom, as bridesmaid, wore blue chiffon having tucking as the only trimming, with a brief jacket of the same material. Her hat was of blue horsehair braid, and she carried pink roses and blue delphinium.

Eugene Myers was his brother's best man, and the ushers were Daniel Myers Hoyt, Kingsley Arter Taft, Charles Newton Taft, Frederick L. Taft, Jr., and Calvin K. Arter, all of Cleveland, and Ivan Browneller.

After a wedding dinner and reception in the Penn-Albert Hotel, Greensburg, Mr. Myers and his bride left for a Bermuda honeymoon.

George Junior Republic Benefit Concert May 27

A concert for the benefit of the George Junior Republic, a school for children, will be held Friday, May 27, in Carnegie Music Hall. The school stands between the beginning offender and the already overcrowded state institutions. The students make and enforce their own laws. Ninety-five per cent of the students have become law abiding citizens.

Margery Selkovitz, Margaret Rae and Marie Vierheller will give a piano recital, and Cass Ward Whitney, accompanied by Hulda Lefridge, will sing.

Mrs. James B. Oliver, chairman of the benefit, is a subscriber, and so is Mrs. Frederick Schaefer, Mrs. George H. Clapp, Mrs. R. T. M. McCready, Mrs. Samuel Adams.

Others are Mrs. Maitland Alexander, Mrs. George Applegate, Mrs. James Madison Stoner, Mrs. Clarence P. Brynes, Mrs. W. O. Campbell, Mrs. Wilson A. Campbell, Mrs. Clinton Childs, Miss Margaret Adair, Miss Ethel Christy, Mrs. Alexander Dann, and Mrs. Frank R. Dravo.

Mrs. Tracy Guthrie will be a patroness, and so will Miss Lucy Haworth, Miss Alice Haworth, Mrs. Robert Keeney.

Civic Club Plans Sale June 16-18

For years there have been benefits sponsored by society folk, but never have there been so many as in the past year. Dances, bridges and plays always have been popular ways of raising money for the less fortunate, but this year rummage sales are gaining in favor.

Recently the Woman's Exchange held a rummage sale, which attracted hundreds and hundreds. Now the Civic Club of Allegheny County has decided to conduct a rummage sale for the benefit of the activities committee.

The dates will be June 16, 17 and 18 at 532 Penn avenue with Mrs. Robert Carson, Jr., of Morewood avenue, as chairman, assisted by many women active in the Civic Club.

50 Years of Service Will Be Observed in Swissvale on June 1

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG

On March 9, 1881, upon request of Miss Jane Holmes, a few Pittsburgh women met in Library Hall, Penn avenue, to consider the establishment of a home for aged men. Later a charter was obtained for the newly incorporated institution which was known as the Home for Aged Protestants and Their Wives, but in December of that year the name was changed to the Home for Aged Protestants.

On Wednesday, June 1, on the same site in Swissvale where it was opened in 1882 the home will celebrate its golden anniversary. The original building, to which have since been added needed additions, and the several acres of land on which it stood were the gift of Miss Jane Holmes, cousin of the founder.

The latter was also the home's first president, the other original officers including Mrs. James Irwin, Mrs. Samuel McKee and Mrs. Thomas Mellon, Judge Mellon's wife, as vice presidents; Mrs. George Morgan, treasurer, and Mrs. Thomas C. Jenkins, secretary.

In those days the only way to reach the home except by carriage was to walk from the Wilkinsburg Station, and the early records tell of the faithfulness of the managers who trudged through rain and snow to attend the frequent meetings at considerable sacrifice of comfort.

Miss Holmes continued as president until her death in October, 1885, and since that time the office has been held by such prominent women as Mrs. Mellon, Mrs. McKee (who served as president until she died at the age of 100 years), Mrs. Matthew Bigger, who resigned after 16 years in office, and Mrs. William A. Dunlap, the incumbent, whose mother, Mrs. George K. Stevenson, had served on the board from 1882 until her death in 1903.

Indeed long and faithful service seems to have characterized all the officers of the home, for in its records one reads that Mrs. George A. Kelly was secretary, succeeding Mrs. Jenkins, for 21 years and that Miss Mary Davidson, her successor, held the office for almost 20 years. Mrs. Harry C. Pears was obliged to resign her duties because of ill health, and at present the board includes two secretaries, Mrs. Harry S. Nicholson, recording, and Mrs. Paul J. Baum, corresponding.

Other officers are Mrs. Bigger, Mrs. George I. Peabody and Mrs. William F. Watt, vice presidents.

A garden party from 3 until 6 o'clock with a program at 4 will mark the anniversary.

Jane Holland — Eleanor Elste

JANE AND ELEANOR have also been invited, together with other daughters of members, to serve as ushers at the annual Congress Choral recital, which is always the music department's chief event of the season.

300 Essay Contestants Are Guests

Three hundred foreign-born women ranging in age from 18 to 60 years, who had taken part in the Council of Jewish Women's Americanization essay contest, were guests of the Pittsburgh section's service for foreign born in the Y. M. and W. H. A. on Wednesday afternoon. Flags of all nations decorated the auditorium and the program also emphasized the international note.

Mrs. Leo I. Half, council president, made the address of welcome. Mrs. Edward O. Tabor gave a folk music recital in costume, a group of Greek women danced and there were songs by a number of other nationalities, selections on the harmonica and one of the guests read an original poem in appreciation of her adopted land.

Addresses were made by Dr. Ben G. Graham, superintendent of city schools, and Dr. Coit R. Hoechst, head of adult education. Prizes for the best essays were awarded Miss Goldie Pollock and Mrs. Katherine Magee.

Countess Pierre de Viel Castel Visiting Gotham

Quarter Century Ago She Was Honor Guest At Extravagant Fetes

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER

Universal Service Society Editor

NEW YORK, May 14.—Arriving on the Paris the other day was the Countess Pierre de Viel Castel.

The name means next to nothing to New York society of today. And yet, less than a quarter of a century ago, the Countess de Viel Castel, as Anna D. Ripley, served as the honored guest at several of the amazingly extravagant entertainments given in New York and Newport by her uncle, James Hazen Hyde, who en passant, was divorced only last month in Paris by his second wife.

The Countess de Viel Castel whose visits to these shores are few and far between is the guest of her mother, Mrs. Charles B. Scott, here during her sojourn in the land of her birth, and many will be the entertainments arranged for her.

Prestige Mighty

Few of the present-day social leaders are cognizant of the prestige of Mrs. Scott, whose first husband, the late Sidney Dillon Ripley, was one of the foremost clubmen of his day. When it comes to caste, Mrs. Scott is a Brahmin of Brahmins and her social background is most interesting, she having been born Mary B. Hyde, daughter of the founder of the Equitable Life Assurance Society. Her first husband was a grandson of the builder of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Count de Viel Castel belongs to one of the oldest families in France and it was one of his great uncles who introduced the Countess de Montijo to Parisian society, thereby paving the way for her daughter's marriage with Napoleon III.

Take Furness Home

From London comes the news that Michael and Gloria Swanson Farmer have taken the Viscountess Furness' house in Farm street for the season and are known as "the Farmers of Farm street."

When she closed the great Furness mansion in Grosvenor square some months ago in keeping with the retrenchment policy in London's Mayfair, Lady Furness, one of my "Magical Morgans," settled in Farm street, a small pictorial thoroughfare made famous by none other than Tallulah Bankhead.

Made Offer

She entertained Michael and Gloria there and they were so impressed with the establishment they immediately made Lady Furness an offer for the place.

Inasmuch as she was about to open the Furness country house at Melton Mowbray, the sister of Mrs. "Reggie" Vanderbilt and Mrs. "Ben" Thaw willingly turned her house over to the famous cinema star and her recently acquired husband.

Incidentally, the Farmers are cutting quite a figure in London society.

Betrothal News

These spring-like days romance certainly is in the air—both at home and abroad—and from merry London I hear tidings of the engagement soon to be announced and which will be of supreme interest to fashionables of Manhattan Isle and the F. F. V.'s of dear old "Virginny."

I refer to the betrothal of Marjorie Glasgow and Lord Cochrane, eldest son and heir of the Earl of Dundonald.

Wilkinsburg Girl Weds In Church

Mr. and Mrs. William Perry Lemley, of Trenton avenue, Wilkinsburg, announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Evelyn Ruth Lemley, to J. The ceremony took place in the Mifflin Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Wilkinsburg, with the Rev. N. H. Sanner officiating.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Olive Marie Lemley, and Harry W. Ackerman, of Pittsburgh, was the best man.

The wedding dinner was given in the Lemley home. Mr. and Mrs. Mills will reside in Schenectady after June 1.

Opportunity to Make Grand Coup Is Rare Occurence in Bridge

By [illegible]

[illegible] the [illegible] situation [illegible] which [illegible] including [illegible] honors [illegible] number of trumps [illegible] held [illegible] from [illegible] latter [illegible] declarer [illegible] play [illegible]

Strong Support

[illegible]

Card Distribution

[illegible] a [illegible] was [illegible] West [illegible] and [illegible] four [illegible]

[illegible]

WEST — Spades [illegible] Hearts [illegible] Diamonds [illegible] Clubs [illegible]

EAST — [illegible]

SOUTH — [illegible]

East [illegible] the [illegible] with a pass. South [illegible] spade. West passed [illegible] bid two [illegible] again [illegible] South [illegible] spades [illegible] better [illegible]. After West repeated [illegible] North [illegible] no [illegible] tation. East [illegible] and South [illegible] five spades, preferring [illegible] bid [illegible] North [illegible] to [illegible]

Coup Only Chance

Then the idea of the grand coup suggested itself to declarer, but its success seemed doubtful, because, as he held three more trumps than East it required a triple reduction to make the trumps equal. However, as there seemed no other way to [illegible] it was decided upon [illegible]. It all depended upon [illegible] and the location of the [illegible] South [illegible] that East held originally four spades, three hearts, three diamonds and three clubs and if the jack [illegible]

[illegible] was led and [illegible] in declarer's hand by the six of spades for trick eight. The king of clubs was led and as West dropped the jack on this lead, declarer gave a sigh of relief.

Prospects Brighter

His prospects looked brighter. [illegible] the queen of hearts was led from dummy and the trick was taken in the South hand with the seven of spades for trick ten. For the eleventh trick the [illegible] of clubs was led and it was taken by North with the ten of clubs. At this stage the ten remaining eight cards were distributed as follows:

NORTH — Clubs—[illegible]

WEST — Hearts—[illegible] Diamonds—10

EAST — Spades—Q 8

SOUTH — Spades—A J

As North is in the lead it is obvious that South will take the last two tricks no matter what East may do, declarer therefore completing his contract for a grand slam at spades, not vulnerable, giving him the following score: For tricks 210 points, for four honors in one hand 100 points, for grand slam bid and made while not vulnerable, 1,000 points; total 1310.

Incidentally, it might be stated that North and South could have fulfilled a contract for seven no trump with ease and without taking a finesse in spades.

A feature of the opening celebration will be the [illegible] pageant, "The Story of America," which has been arranged by R. J. MacDonald, managing director, to commemorate the George Washington bicentennial.

While most park and resort executives are looking forward to this summer with pessimism, MacDonald has announced that he expects a good year, because he is placing new ideas in entertainment into effect. Early bookings indicate a successful summer at the resort, he says.

The first large convention at Conneaut Lake Park will be the state chapter session of the Order of Eastern Star. Every room in Hotels Conneaut, Virginia and [illegible] have been reserved for the convention which will be held from June 12 to 16.

One of the largest pre-season banquets will be that of the [illegible] League in honor of Fish Commissioner O. H. Deibler, which will be held May 27. Most of the other pre-season parties will be fraternity and sorority dances and dinners.

Ray Brethour, theatrical decorator, is now engaged in remodeling the dance pavilion, the hotel dining rooms and ballrooms, the bathing pavilion and other places. # SHIP EQUIPPED IN PITTSBURGH

The new Monterey, second of the three super-liners in the Oceanic Steamship Company's $25,000,000 shipbuilding program, is now on her way to California, after which she will go immediately into the South Seas-New Zealand-Australian service for which she was built.

Passengers on the new Oceanic liner will find the vessel practically vibrationless. She is electrically equipped throughout from the Westinghouse galley equipment to the apparatus for handling the cargo and to the smallest ventilating fan.

All of the Monterey's auxiliaries which were furnished by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company and built in Pittsburgh, are electrically operated, the current being supplied by four 500-kilowatt Westinghouse generating sets. The ship was sponsored by Mrs. Saxton Bishop of Honolulu and was launched October 10 of last year.

FARES ARE CUT BY SHIP LINES

Announcement that the Dollar Line has made sharp reductions in fares from New York and California ports, is being followed by similar action by other lines. The Panama Pacific Line reductions are now in force, while the Matson Navigation Company did likewise.

There will also be a discount of 25 per cent on round-trip tickets. The new rates apply to both first-class and tourist bookings on the turbo-electric liners California, Pennsylvania and Virginia.

The Dollar Line announced that discounts on round-trip bookings between New York and California will bring the total to the equivalent of a fare and a half for the trip in both directions, the lowest rates quoted since the Panama Canal was opened.

Matson Navigation Company officials have announced that with the sailing of the Monterey, now on her way to California, intercoastal fares from New York to the Pacific Coast have been reduced.

THE BOOK SHELF—by George Seibel

Schoen Answers Ancient Question: 'What Is Beauty?'

The question, "What is Art?" has been asked as often as Pilate's "What is Truth?" and has been answered no more adequately. It is once again propounded by Prof. Max Schoen, of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, in his book on "Art and Beauty" (published by Macmillan). And of course he essays to answer it, after protesting rather forcibly that it can't be answered. In this attitude he reminds one of Goold Brown, author of the "Grammar of English Grammars," a huge volume of over 1,000 pages filled with mountains of proof that all the grammarians were ungrammatical until Goold Brown came parsing along.

Mr. Seibel

The essence of Dr. Schoen's doctrine may be found in his chapter on Art and the Artist. In previous chapters he has been looking for definitions. He has denied artistic truth to Sinclair Lewis, awarding it to Theodore Dreiser. He has quoted in extenso a fine poem Amy Lowell must have written while drunk with Browning. Then he proclaims that—

"What a Keats, a Shakespeare, a Beethoven lived, labored over, and poured his life's blood into, is no matter for judgment, but for reverence, hope, and gratitude if its power penetrates into us and revives us. The sole judge of the art work, the only one who can judge and has a right to judge, is the artist himself of his own work."

'Judge Not, Lest—'

Now, if this is true, what right has Dr. Schoen to judge Sinclair Lewis?

But it isn't true. It is no more true than would be the dictum that the only one qualified to judge whether a beefsteak be tender is the cook, or the only one who has a right to say whether the boots fit is the shoemaker.

Even so fault can be found with Dr. Schoen's own definition of an art work:

"An art work is the expression of a unique experience by a unique mind, the expression resulting in a product which is a perfect record of the experience."

Why unique—why perfect?

Let us take "Romeo and Juliet" or Keats' "Ode to a Nightingale," Corot's "Dance of the Nymphs" or Michelangelo's "Moses."

As expressions of love, despair, visible music or majestic wisdom, these creations are not unique nor were their creators without peer. They are not perfect even though we may admit that none but their creators could have brought them nearer to perfection.

To proclaim them as unique or perfect is an act of criticism.

Definitions are dangerous, for words, elusive as eels, are fanged like serpents.

Both May Be Liars

The great merit of Dr. Schoen's stimulative work is that it is a diligent inquiry into the elements of the beautiful. But why should he dismiss Poe's account of how he wrote "The Raven" as "a pack of lies," while he piously accepts Nietzsche's tale of how he wrote "Thus Spake Zarathustra"? As for John Middleton Murry's labored theory of the sonnet Keats wrote, "On First Looking Into Chapman's Homer," that simply amounts to saying what everyone knows, that "the composition of a great poem is but a final conscious act supervening upon a long process of unconscious elaboration."

When Dr. Schoen writes of the Creative Mind he is most sane, lucid and inspiring. That is his peculiar province of psychology. When he sails forth upon the sea of esthetics, trying to find what is beautiful and why, he meets with rocks and reefs. For what seems beautiful to one race in one age may be hideous to another generation a few centuries later. There is relativity in all things. We all admire the customary, of which the unusual is but the other side. Whether it's the intuition of Croce or the empathy of Theodor Lipps, our eyes judge by what they see and compare it with what they know. Maybe Keats said it all with his "Beauty is truth, truth beauty, that is all ye know on earth and all ye need to know."

As a historical criticism of esthetics, Dr. Schoen's book is very readable and immensely suggestive. But he doesn't solve the question by setting up an Unknowable in the manner of Herbert Spencer and bidding us to grovel before Beethoven. First we must exercise our critical faculties to make sure it is Beethoven. It may be merely an organ-grinder.

BUT MEN ARE LIKE THAT!

Noel Streatfeild's story, "The Whicharts" (published by Brentano), tells of three little girls, deserted by their mothers, who lived with Miss Rose in the Cromwell road. Rose had met the brigadier, then a captain, at a military ball, and deserted her family for the handsome English officer, who afterwards deserts her, but brings back these little girls from time to time. Through war and other troubles they keep together. The odd title of the book came from the prayer they said, beginning "Our Father which art."

GYPSY LOVE IN VALENCIA

Leon Tancheechee—what's in a name?—has written a fine first novel in "Valencia" (published by Coward-McCann). An artist-writer who has lived in all parts of Europe, he writes with glamorous style about Spain. The book is a panoramic canvas of color, deftly painted with gypsy lore and Spanish music—"rich with carnations and almond trees, with the odor of the earth and the trill of the nightingale."

Cross Willard, an American, is living in Valencia as print expert, artist and fortune teller. He has become friendly with several of the natives, the Count de Jenor, plump Dona Lola and the exquisite Pepita of the diminutive "Watteau Wrists," whom he revels in painting. His life is serene. He loves Pepita and spends all his time with these charming Spanish folk, until one day Marija, the fiery gypsy, whom he has known previously, comes to his apartment, and with a bread-knife cuts the portrait of Pepita into ribbons. There is another episode within this tale—a dramatic court scene as the result of the Count's indictment for the murder of his mother. The book has its exciting crescendo interludes, but pervading throughout one feels the exotic tranquility of this warm and fragrant land of moonlight and nightingales.

FINE BOOK FOR BOYS

Founded on the log of a Dutch skipper who made a trip to the East Indies in 1618, Johan Wigmore Fabricius tells a fine adventure story in "Java Ho!" (published by Coward-McCann). Peter Hajo, whose father had drowned at sea, apprenticed to a smith, saw in his mind's eye mountains, brilliant birds, tigers and crocodiles while he helped the "Iron Man." Peter goes to ask the skipper of the Nieuw Hoorn, who takes him on the voyage. They get scurvy, boil eggs in hot springs, see parrots and chameleons; they visit Madagascar, Sumatra, Malay; they almost burn their ship by setting brandy afire—and have a tropical time all through this fine book for boys.

COUNTESS TURNS RED

Frances, Countess of Warwick, a descendant of Nell Gwynne and Oliver Cromwell, tells her own story in "Life's Ebb and Flow" (published by Morrow). Her father was a famous athlete. She was educated by a governess with Victorian ideas.

Disraeli planned to have her marry a prince, but she loved a mere lord, who later became Earl of Warwick. She gives interesting reminiscences of Henry Irving, Ellen Terry, Sarah Bernhardt, Tennyson and others. She shocked the nobility by joining the Socialist party and organizing a workers' college. She made lecture tours to America, and took as her motto "all for each and each for all."

EMETIC ART IN FICTION

There is an Emetic School of novel writers who think the road to originality leads through the sewers of the dictionary. William Faulkner took this road to reach his "Sanctuary" (published by Modern Library), which is just vague and smelly, though some think it's great.

A crude mixture of Anatole France and Branch Cabell is what Tiffany Thayer made of "The Greek" (published by A. & C. Boni). The whole is a moderately amusing fantasy of America's subjugation by a fabulous Hellene who is a mixture of Achilles, Rudolf Valentino and Bernard Shaw. Some unnecessarily coarse and disgusting pages make one wish this author had less cleverness and better taste.

LOVE AND LEARNING

Pauline Warwick extracts romance from erudition in "Diana's Daughter" (published by Dial Press). Patience, daughter of beautiful Diana, is a student at Oxford hoping to get a First; Jennifer, her friend, is writing on scientific themes. Richard, son of the rector, asks Patience to marry him, and when she refuses he goes off to a distant job, while Patience also lands a situation as tutor to a small boy. A formidable uncle, a love charm Richard tries to steal (it's the Girdle of Venus), and much Greek and Turkish atmosphere give the story piquancy and color.

BIRTHDAYS OF AUTHORS

Today, May 15 (1862)—Gerhart Hauptmann, German dramatist and poet, "The Sunken Bell."

May 16 (1839)—Rene Francois Armand Sully-Prudhomme, French poet.

May 17 (1845)—Charles F. Dole, American clergyman and author.

May 19 (1762)—Johann Gottlieb Fichte, German philosopher.

May 20 (1470)—Pietro Bembo, Italian cardinal and writer.

ART COMMENT—by Penelope Redd

Art Season Stays On, Offering Many And Varied Shows

The art season, which by all signs and portents should have faded with the arbutus blossoms of early spring, shows a surprising tenacity. Carnegie Institute announces an exhibition of 52 paintings by 18 Pittsburgh artists to open on May 18. Six women, Marcella Comes, Esther Topp Edmonds, Johanna K. W. Hailman, Louise Pershing, Esther Phillips and Elizabeth Robb, will exhibit. The 12 men are E. M. Ashe, Raymond B. Dowden, Samuel B. Filner, Roy A. Hilton, John Kane, Malcolm Parcell, Milan Petrovits, Samuel Rosenberg, William R. Shulgold, Raymond Simboli, Christian Walter and Everett Warner.

Miss Redd

Kaufmann's will present two diverse shows this week: Chinese objects of art in lacquer, jade, carnelian, agate, cinnabar, porcelain and brocades. These objects have a habit of being at home even in the most contemporary of decorative schemes. The other show at Kaufmann's will be a thoroughly modern conceit, Elizabeth Arden's collection of dolls. Thirty nationalities are represented in the group designed by Mme. Jeanne Lebedeff, a Polish artist.

School Show

Perhaps the largest show allied to art that has ever been gathered in the town is that of 22,000 pictorial and crafts items from the public and parochial schools of Pittsburgh at Gimbels. When this review was prepared the material was being installed. The show will be on view for the next fortnight. The undertaking is tremendous and well deserves the public interest it is certain to arouse.

A fragment of news that seemed of import during the past week was the endeavor of the Mt. Lebanon Women's Club to assemble an art exhibition at the Mt. Lebanon United Presbyterian Church. This brief, one-day exhibition is a healthy sign. More such voluntary, amateur exhibitions will be an impetus towards wider interest in the splendid professional shows which may be seen free in Pittsburgh constantly throughout the season.

Saul Raskin, who has gained considerable renown for his Palestian subjects, will exhibit at the Young Men and Women's Hebrew Association on Bellefield avenue, commencing today and continuing through May 18.

Sculptors in the Making

The sculptors in the exhibition of work by students at the College of Fine Arts, Carnegie Tech, was not discussed with the work in pictorial arts last week. Joseph Bailey Ellis, head of the department, makes an excellent showing.

His group includes many sculptures which won honors in the Beaux Arts and in the Alumni of the American Academy of Rome problems, where the school competed with 30 others throughout the United States. Raymond Barger, Oltrado Lisotto and Catherine McSwigan ranked high in solving such problems as an equestrian group, a funeral urn for a famous composer and a figure for a radio university.

Among the women students Edith Barnes and Helen Meigs seem to have the type of talent that includes technical aptitude infused with original ideas.

Graphic Arts

"The Fifty Prints of the Year" at Carnegie Institute lead one to conclude that this was an off-year with the American print-makers, if these are the 50 best from the 2,000 invited. Forty-one of the prints shown are in the tried mediums of etching, drypoint and lithography so there does not seem much likelihood of mediums hybrid as a drug store sandwich gaining ascendancy.

John Taylor Arms and Max Weber selected the conservative and modern prints respectively. In the United States there are many collateral heirs to the style created by Rembrandt, revived by Whistler and carried on by the Scotsmen, Bone and Cameron. Our national leaders in this mode usually select foreign architectural monuments as subjects on which to lavish their technical finesse.

John Taylor Arms, Louis Rosenberg, Ernest Roth, Herman Webster and Samuel Chamberlain poetize French, Italian and Swedish places in this manner.

Benson, perhaps our finest etcher, is seen at less than his best in "Black Ducks Towering." John Sloan's portrait of Robert Henri and William Auerbach Levy's study of Timothy Cole are done affectionately and with unaffected skill.

Eugene Higgins' "Hungry Mouths" is technically good and humanly appealing. Grant Reynard's two women in a museum looking at a Degas portrait shows an etcher of promise.

The exhibition fails chiefly because the selection of prints in the modern bracket is unsatisfactory. One refuses to believe these were the most significant prints available. New names, that in our estimation do not justify the honor, are included, while certain of our best contemporary artists in the graphic medium are excluded. The exhibition is far below the standard of graphic arts one is accustomed to find at the Carnegie Institute.

MADELON'S MIRROR

of Feminine Fancy

ALAS and alack! Woe are we! We spend so much time and energy pawing out shop news for you, that we feel it a personal insult when "April showers" arrive in May as they've been doing . . . and take all the starch out of our ideas! We were all set to do a little song and dance act about Brides . . . and Bridesmaids . . . and those other little things which help to put the "G" in glamour which should surround any girl's wedding! But with all this dampness wilting their veils even before we begin to purr contentedly about the smartest ones . . . we think we'd better go off on the subject of something less perishable for the moment—say, Wedding Gifts! With Hardy & Hayes and Sipe's both doing the unusual just now . . . choosing wedding gifts should not present a difficult problem. Time was, when we went in for silver compotes and tea services quite lavishly . . . but that is over. In its place we find just as "good" things are being given . . . but in less gorgeous numbers . . . and much less expensively. With the 40% discount which Sipe's are offering just now on everything in their store but flat silver . . . you should not be overwhelmed at the prospects of "Here Comes the Bride." And with Hardy & Hayes discreetly drawing your attention to the fact that some of their most beautiful handbags have been reduced to $5 . . . and that there are little English crystal and silver bracelets for the same . . . you should be doubly sure that you are in the correct place for gift-buying. (Incidentally, these last will make perfect remembrances for the bride to give her attendants!) Keep this in mind!

. . . Bright Eyes!

SPARKLE and brightness . . . how can you have it? Your eyes are the answer. How can any woman expect to be gay and attractive if her eyes are dull and lifeless . . . with blurred coloring? It is to insure your charm that Elizabeth Arden has created her Crystalline Eye Drops ($1.25) . . . little jewel-like beads of moisture which drop into your eyes and clear them. Next, her Special Eye Lotion . . . the better to soothe you with. It comes in big bottles for $1 . . . and you use it every day. Then, should you have those little puffy places which we all dislike to see arise under our eyes . . . use a little of the Arden Special Eye Cream at night, patting it into the tissues 'round your eyes. It costs but $1.50 . . . at Gimbels Toilet Goods counter with the rest of Arden's toiletries. Ask for Miss Forrester, and let her explain the Arden method in detail.

. . . Twin Stars!

TWO stars on the horizon down at Hardy & Hayes! Can you imagine getting a Hardy & Hayes handbag for $5? We were completely bowled over when we tripped sedately in there this week and were confronted with this news! Antique brocade bags . . . a big one of beautiful henna-colored shoe calf (hand made) . . . woven straw fabrics . . . all of them silk-moire lined, and in a variety of styles and colors! And the twin star to these was the trick little bracelets of silver . . . done up with horseshoe fastenings and little English crystal "dangles" with horses' heads . . . dogs . . . or even a fox! Quite the sporty thing for you . . . and they'd make darling graduation gifts to the young girl! They're $5 too . . . in spite of the fact that they're brand new and just being shown! At Hardy & Hayes, Wood Street and Oliver.

Clever cotton-knit frocks are poking their heads out from the cases in a certain store . . . just begging to be bought for $2.95! If you are a tender-hearted soul . . . and if you like your little bargains . . . call us and find out where you can get these!

. . . News for the Blues!

HERE'S news to chase away those depression blues! Maison Frederic has issued a new price list for the work done in their School of Beauty Culture! Now we women can get ourselves all prinked up for far lower sums than before . . . with all the most modern benefits of this school to boot. There are clean towels for every customer . . . all sanitary conveniences . . . finest materials and fine operators. Those of you who have been wishing for lowered prices will get your wish! Finger waving and shampooing are 25c each . . . marceling is FREE . . . and other services run accordingly. Don't let yourselves get run-down in your grooming with an offer like this waiting you down at 207 Fifth Avenue!

The trickiest and drollest of little French sketches for children's room . . . with a comment under each . . . and priced 99c. All framed, and ready to hang! See them if you like to laugh!

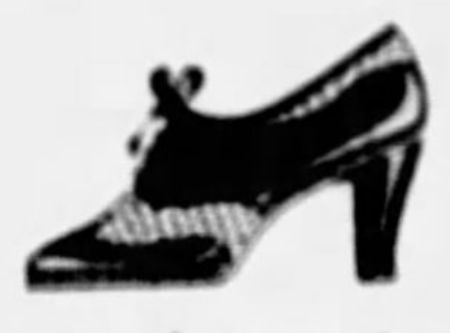
. . . Important!

WHEN you go to anyone for a consultation about your skin or physical condition, you want to know about their background . . . their experience . . . their methods. And that is why we are taking a moment here to tell you about the years Dr. Gehrs has behind him in his business as a skin specialist. For 30 years he has been relieving people of eczematous conditions . . . of acne . . . or psoriasis . . . and blemishes of all kinds. His methods are all the most modern . . . and the dozens of old patients who are constantly returning to him prove his value. If YOU are heartsick over your skin . . . if YOU have an unsightly wart or mole you want to be rid of . . . see Dr. Gehrs at his office in the Nixon Building. You may have a free consultation . . . or may make an appointment by calling Atlantic 1104.

. . . Petty's Latest!



WE never know quite what to expect down at the Petty Shoe Co. . . . and now they spring this on us. A brand new line of smart shoes for $6. The one sketched is a good example of what you will find at this shop on the main floor of the Jenkins Arcade. It is a black mat kid number . . . with genuine reptile insertions across the foot and at the sides . . . an oxford of aristocracy (even though it is only $6) . . . and one with plenty of dressy modishness to its high heels. Of course it has the Petty last . . . which means much in the lives of comfort-loving souls. And it may be had in brown with tan reptile as well. We think that if we were you, we should waste no time bounding down to Petty's to see these new $6 models!

. . . Sing a Song!

OH, sing a song of atmosphere and good things to eat! Then you'll find yourself thinking of the Hofbrau (the former Kramer's) where "meeting and eating" are one and the same. What with engagement luncheons . . . graduation jamborees . . . and all the other goings-on . . . you will be glad to know that by calling Atlantic 7332 you can make special arrangements for parties (menus of your own choice). There's the "Old World" Grill . . . or the spacious Danube Room for lunch or dinner later (with 7 courses for $1 . . . chicken or steak, if you please!) You'll find yourselves going back for more of the famous Hofbrau menus . . . with their sauces and pastries—and reveling in the music of the Hofbrau Serenaders. And, if you're like we are, you'll make a permanent date with yourselves for that Live Lobster Special (75c) every Friday! 25 Graeme Street, you know, "in the Diamond."

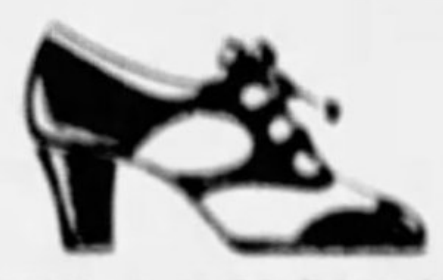
. . . Discount Sale!

BRIDES-TO-BE . . . graduates-to-be . . . everyone! This is for you! Sam F. Sipe, Diamond Street at Wood, is having 40% Discount Inventory Sale now . . . a sale inclusive of everything in their store (except silver flatware). We trundled in there this week . . . cast an eye over their assortments . . . and were left simply astounded at the opportunities for anyone who has a wedding gift or something similar to buy. Real Chinese jade rings of gold, as well as those of other semiprecious stones, are now $4.80! Elgin wrist watches for women . . . 1932 models . . . with 15-jewel movements . . . all solid gold, are $27! And leather traveling clocks in all colors, ideal for boudoir use . . . formerly priced $27.50 to $30 . . . appear for $12.50. These are only a few of the numerous fine things you can get NOW at Sipe's. Put a ring around the calendar and trot in there this week.

. . . Travelogue!

"ALL 'round Robin Hood's barn" is nothing to what you'll be doing if you join up for the All-Europe Cruise which is scheduled for July 2nd. You will be gone 54 days . . . see 12 countries . . . go lolloping about in Seville and Algiers only to continue onwards to see Norwegian fjords a little later. This cruise takes you through the western Mediterranean . . . to Holland . . . Scotland . . . the Scandinavian countries . . . Paris . . . England . . . and home. These are a mere handful of all the places visited (with shore excursions included in the cost of $495 upwards) . . . but we think you'd better trot in to see Mr. Miller in the Travel Department of the Union Savings Bank to hear the exact details.

. . . New! New!



RITTER & MORRISON have brought the newest news of all to you with their white and brown buckskin shoes. These have joined the ranks of new shoes down at this shop, 501 Liberty Avenue, looking as cool and comfortable as they feel. Ghillie-tie effects with leather heels and perforations by way of toe-trimming! And brown calf doing the strapping on the sides and front. Just the sort of shoes you'll wear the whole Summer through . . . and just the sort of shoes you'd expect to buy for much more than their price of $10! Yes, they have Menihan Arch-Aids as well as style . . . so you'll be sure of foot-ease in the warmest weather. Stop in for a peep at them . . . and enjoy Ritter & Morrison's famous "unhurried service"!

Bonne Bell has come to the rescue with a wonderful new cream . . . the Medicated Creme which has been created purposely for people with acne conditions . . . blackheads . . . pimples . . . and other skin impurities or troubles of this kind! It is one of those cremes which easily and scientifically clears up such conditions . . . leaving the skin firm and healthy. And one of the beauties of it is the way that the other Bonne Bell toiletries may be used with it without affecting its benefits in any way. We were quite impressed with it . . . and you who are troubled with skin afflictions will want to call Montrose [illegible] for information on treatments with this Creme—or write Bonne Bell, Inc., a note to their factory address—12616 Detroit Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

. . . Dried Up!

SOMETIMES we feel as if our faces would dry up and blow away! . . . and that's the time we should get ourselves the Barbara Gould treatment for dry skins. This has been perfected just for skins which are subject to lack of nourishment . . . and will work wonders for you if properly applied. Cleanse the face with Barbara Gould Cleansing Cream, using gentle upward strokes. Remove . . . and follow by the Tissue Cream, which has had a few drops of Muscle Oil heated and mixed into it. Thoroughly massage this into the skin . . . then wipe ALMOST all of it off, leaving enough to nourish the skin during the night. In the morning a cleansing, followed by the Skin Freshener, will make your skin fairly glow. Pat a little Finishing Cream on . . . and you are ready for makeup. So easy . . . so sensible . . . and so simple to get—at any of the department stores.

Question Box

A friend of mine and I have written a song and would like to send it to several networks in the hope that they will present it on their programs. Do you think it likely that they will consider it? What are the addresses of NBC and CBS? On what station is Billy Weixel playing?—M. F., South Greensburg.

The best way to determine whether they would play your song would be to send it to them and await results—but remember to enclose return postage. Artists are continually receiving a veritable flood of requests to present such numbers, and unless they are outstanding, the chances are very much against their being heard on the air.

Address NBC at 711 Fifth avenue, New York, and CBS at 485 Madison avenue, New York. Billy Weixel is not on the air at present.

FINANCIAL Local Securities MARKETS

SLOW DECLINE CONTINUES ON LOCAL MARKET

Industrials Reflect Drop On 'Big Board;' Oil and Gas Issues Remain Steady.

Securities on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange drifted lower during the week, following the general trend of prices on the "big board." No acute weakness made its appearance here. The selling was of the same character noted for several weeks, comprising mainly mild liquidation induced by the spiraling deflation the markets have been undergoing since the current phase of the decline began early in March.

There was no concentration of activity in any particular group or issues. Stocks which ordinarily lead the list in point of volume maintained those positions. Lone Star had the largest turnover, followed by Columbia Gas and Western Public Service. In none of these did the week's loss amount to a full point.

INDUSTRIALS DECLINE

The industrials fared a little worse than the fuels. United Engineering encountered selling most of the week and receded slowly to 13, a new low and a decline of two points for the week. Offerings were interpreted as anticipating a cut in the dividend, at present on a $2 annual basis. Westinghouse Electric fell back with the movement in New York despite comment that the company will likely benefit substantially as a result of the Pennsylvania's electrification program, now apparently assured through a loan of $27,500,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The road originally asked for $55,000,000 but it is understood has made arrangements to obtain half of that sum from other sources.

SENTIMENT DEPRESSED

General sentiment was rather gloomy as the week closed. The main divisions of the big market were in new low ground for the bear movement which has been under way almost three years. Conversion of securities into cash by some large insurance companies appeared to have been resumed on Friday and further liquidation of bank loans was also indicated. Supplies of stocks and bonds from these sources had decreased noticeably at the middle of the week but the resumption of the selling movement found the market inclined to back away.

Flax Prices Reach Lowest in 25 Years

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 14 —(AP)—Flax prices fell to the lowest level in a quarter century on the Minneapolis grain market today, with flax for the July delivery selling at one time at $1.11, 10½ cents below Friday's final prices.

Traders said lack of demand from crushers due to inactivity in that industry caused the decline. Final quotations were 4½ to 6½ cents below the previous close.

May flax was quoted at $1.16, July $1.15½ and Sept. $1.11.

Aetna Insurance Assets Increase

NEW YORK, May 14—(AP)—Total assets of the Aetna Life Insurance Company increased from $424,776,176 at the end of 1930 to $437,949,074 at the end of 1931, according to the annual report issued today. New premiums received in 1931 totaled $9,531,706 against $10,160,005 in 1930, while renewed premiums aggregated $70,711,940 against $69,473,870. Total receipts were $131,622,603 against $131,556,640 in 1930, an excess of receipts over disbursements was $18,020,776 against $23,433,700.

Move to Dissolve Insull Injunction

Change in National Bank Law Opposed

PRICE INDEX HOLDS STEADY

AUBURNDALE, Mass., May 14.—(AP)—Evidence of an intention by Congress to take decisive action in regard to passing a sound tax bill and an earnest effort to cooperate on an economy measure had the effect of engendering more confidence, thus providing greater support for commodity prices, says the McGill Commodity Service.

The index of all commodities was again lower, but only fractionally, and evidence of greater stability is noted in the fact that out of 14 industrial groups five remained the same, three were higher, while six were lower. A greater number of groups held stable than for several weeks.

The most important price changes in the McGill weekly commodity prices indices (1926—100) follow:

McDowell, Sharon, will be another speaker, talking on "Holding the Line for the Unit Bank."

The afternoon will be given over to two divisional sessions. Members of the American Bankers Association will elect their officers and delegates. Maurice G. Shannon, vice president for Pennsylvania, will preside. The trust company division also will elect its officers and receive reports. Addresses will be given by William A. Wilson, Frank G. Sayre and Carl W. Fenninger.

The annual dinner-dance will be held Wednesday night and the convention will close with a general meeting Thursday morning when officers will be elected.

Porto Rico Seeks Funds From R. F. C.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—(INS)—Gov. J. R. Beverley, of Porto Rico, called on President Hoover today to interest him in efforts being made to have the benefits of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation extended to Porto Rican banks.

The Governor said that frozen collateral in the island banks would have to be liquidated if production loans are to be available on this year's crop. Porto Rico anticipates a bumper sugar crop and will have the first coffee crop since the cyclone of 1928, he said, and financing is badly needed.

Building Activity Up 26.7% in April

NEW YORK, May 14.—(AP)—April figures on building permits showed a marked improvement over March and afford ground for some encouragement, says Bradstreet's. The permits recorded a gain of 26.7 per cent over the previous month as against a normal April gain of 6 to 7 per cent.

The April total for 215 cities was $47,741,687, which compares with $37,676,746 in March. The decrease from April last year was 68.6 per cent.

Receivers Report On Match Company

NEW YORK, May 14.—(INS)—The tentative statement issued by receivers of the International Match Corporation today, subject to final audit, showed a net profit for the period from January 1, 1932, to April 13, 1932, of $395,847 after charges but before federal taxes.

A meeting of creditors of the International Match Corporation called for today for the purpose of electing a trustee in bankruptcy was adjourned today until June 1.

Coast Operators Agree on Oil Cut

LOS ANGELES, May 14.—Representatives of Santa Barbara County oil operators have approved a new plan for state-wide oil curtailment being sponsored by Neal N. Anderson, state oil umpire.

Oil operators in the Dominguez district have agreed to cut production to a maximum of 20,000 barrels daily. Current output is about 32,000 barrels daily.

ATTACKS B. & O. LOAN REQUEST

WASHINGTON, May 14.—(INS)—The application of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to the Interstate Commerce Commission for approval of a three-year loan of $50,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was attacked today by Charles Forney of the Profile Timber Corporation, of Norfolk, Va. He petitioned the commission to deny the application on the ground that the railroad was "bankrupt."

He declared it had reached this stage as a result of "careless and improvident management and proximate financial requirements." He said he was petitioning as an individual desiring to further the public interest.

Forney recently petitioned the commission to approve the Pennsylvania Railroad's application for a loan of $55,000,000. On March 30 last the commission approved a loan of $7,000,000 to the B. & O. without prejudice to the granting of further loans.

BALTIMORE, May 14.—Officials of the B. & O. said today they could make no comment on the Forney matter until after they had time to study the petition.

Rayburn Rail Bill Defeat Predicted

WASHINGTON, May 14.—(INS)—The proposal of the House committee on interstate commerce to revise the transportation act, including repeal of the recapture clause, today appeared doomed to defeat for the session. After hearing bitter opposition to considering railroad legislation, the House rules committee reserved decision on the request of chairman Rayburn of Texas to put the bill on the House calendar.

The measure not only embraces repeal of recapture of excess earnings but also revised the present rate making and valuation policies and brings holding companies under strict control of the commission.

Chevrolet's April Sales Expand 85%

DETROIT, May 14.—One of the most encouraging reflections on current business to come out of this automotive center in recent months is the announcement that Chevrolet dealers reported 85 per cent more cars sold at retail in April than in March and that April sales were 6,000 units greater than production. The total of 61,309 units compares with 33,125 sold in March and with 55,432 built in April.

Atlantic Refining Advances Bulk Gas

The Atlantic Refining Company will increase the tank car price of motor gasoline below 65 octane ½ cent a gallon to 7 cents effective Monday at Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore and Norfolk.

Atlantic Refining Company and Standard Oil Company of New Jersey have reduced discounts to commercial gasoline customers under contracts accounts to one cent a gallon off the service station price. Previously companies had been allowing commercial accounts under contract the equivalent of two cents a gallon.

Henry L. Doherty, Utility Magnate, a Unique 'Rebel'

By B. C. FORBES

He celebrated his 10th birthday selling newspapers on the streets.

Today, exactly 50 years later, his birthday is being celebrated by the opening of the third largest structure in the world, conceived and built by him in the heart of the world's foremost financial center, Wall street.

Instead of selling newspapers, he sells electric and gas light and power to almost 10,000 cities and communities, controls oil properties capable of supplying the entire needs of the United States, directs the destinies of a billion-dollar enterprise, heads well over 100 utilities and other companies, has accumulated more real estate than any other human being in the priceless area comprising New York's financial center, and has to his credit many revolutionary achievements, technical and scientific, in the realm of gas, electricity and oil.

Mr. Forbes

This man, Henry L. Doherty, is unique, a genius.

THE WORLD and the people in it, it is said, are becoming like many products—standardized.

Not so Henry Doherty!

Constitutionally he is a rebel, always has been. He rebels against the static. Things exist but to be improved. Change, progress must be the law of life. Before he was 20, although without college learning, he was revolutionizing processes and appliances for manufacturing gas. Even thus early he was manager of the plant he entered as an office boy at 12.

HIS EXPERIENCES embraced Columbus, O.; St. Paul, San Antonio, Denver and many other cities. Meanwhile he was blossoming as a financier as well as engineer, inventor, chemist, operator.

When 35 he organized Henry L. Doherty & Co., bankers and operators of public utility corporations. Five years later he formed Cities Service Company, holding company for scores of utility and petroleum properties, an organization that today has more than 600,000 [illegible] [illegible]

HIS [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] are glad to [illegible] him.

MR. DOHERTY'S [illegible] are as unique as his mental processes.

Although he lived in Wall street—the only wealthy man having his home on the lower tip of Manhattan—he wouldn't visit his office for weeks. He explained to me many years ago, when I visited him in his isolated bachelor's quarters:

"You can think better away from details, routine and all the interruptions of a business office. When I get my teeth into a problem I can work on it 18 hours or more on end without distraction."

[illegible] Mr. Doherty has received medals from scientific bodies [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. Doubtless more gratifying to him, he has seen revolutionary ideas, original, [illegible], uncompromisingly accepted by the utility and oil industries. The unit operation of oil pools is a classic example.

THE SIXTY WALL tower, the colossal structure just opened, embraces many novel characteristic Doherty ideas—double-deck elevators to serve the top-most tier of the 67 stories, reversible escalators for the first six stories, ornamental railings instead of the customary unsightly walls at the setbacks, unique ventilation and heating systems, and reaching high into the heavens a Neon light visible for 200 miles at sea and land for the guidance of aviators.

ALTHOUGH MR. DOHERTY is no longer a bachelor, he still has his own ideas of what constitutes an ideal habitation. He lives on tower-tops. Which is perhaps fitting.

WHEAT CLOSES NERVOUS, OFF

CHICAGO, May 14.—Disturbed by proposed financial enactments at Washington and by instability of the New York stock market, wheat values underwent abrupt tumbles today.

Falling to more than 2 cents a bushel under April top prices, wheat showed almost complete absence of any aggressive buying.

Wheat closed nervous, ½ to 1 under yesterday's finish, with corn varying from ½ off to ⅛ up, oats ⅛ to ½ down and provisions unchanged to a setback of 15 cents.

Provisions gave way under scattered selling, and dropped to a new low for the season since 1897.

COTTON CLOSES HEAVY, DOWN

NEW YORK, May 14.—Cotton prices fluctuated within a range of 4 or 5 points in a comparatively quiet market during today's trading.

Some local and Southern selling on favorable weather reports was absorbed by covering, outside buying and after selling off to 5.36 early, July closed at 5.33. The final tone was steady, with the market net unchanged to 1 point lower.

The amount of cotton on shipboard at United States ports awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 11,000 bales against 18,000 last year and 15,000 two years ago.

PENN MEX AIDS SOUTH PENN BY LAST DIVIDEND

Mexican Company, Controlled By Local Organization, Believed to Show Profit.

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

Penn Mex [illegible] Company is still [illegible] [illegible] the earnings of [illegible] the unfavorable [illegible] the oil business.

South Penn [illegible] per cent [illegible] Penn Mex [illegible] week Penn Mex [illegible] dividend of 50 cents [illegible] payable May 25. This will [illegible] $150,000 on South Penn's [illegible] and will be [illegible] a share on South Penn [illegible].

Penn Mex [illegible] operations are [illegible] of Mexico, [illegible] periods for paying [illegible]. The last previous dividend was 50 cents a share payable October 31, 1931. This [illegible] a payment of 75 cents a share [illegible] June 30, 1931.

PRODUCTION CUT

Due to the [illegible] demand for oil, Penn Mex has [illegible] in its production but is understood to be still showing a profit.

South Penn Oil, whose operations are [illegible] Pennsylvania and West Virginia fields, is having its position improved by recent advances in quotations on Pennsylvania grades of crude oil. Better prices in this district are largely due to the control of production. Proration measures have been more effective in Pennsylvania fields than in the balance of the country. The high lubricating quality of the oil also makes the market to a certain extent independent of prices in other parts of the country.

REPORTS LOSS

As a result of low prices South Penn reported a loss of $820,191 for 1931. This compared with a profit of $1,[illegible] or $1.15 a share in 1930.

The loss for 1931 was large but [illegible] the [illegible] of liberal [illegible] depreciation [illegible]. These charges were more than twice the reported loss [illegible] for the fact that the company came to the end of the year in a much better current financial position than at the beginning.

Depreciation charges amounted to $1,396,116 and depletion charges were $[illegible]. In addition a charge of $[illegible],200 was made for market declines in inventories.

At the end of 1931 South Penn's current assets amounted to $13,650,746 against current liabilities of $1,380,03[illegible]. This indicated net working capital of $12,270,733 against $11,[illegible],[illegible] a year before.

The company has no bonds or preferred stock. The 1,200,000 shares of common stock are on a $1 annual dividend basis.

MARKET GLOOM REFLECTED IN LOWER PRICES

Industrial Average Touches Lowest Point Since 1904; Pressure Is Unrelenting.

By BROADAN WALL

Universal Service

NEW YORK, May 14.—Gloom predominated the financial market again today and prices for stocks as well as various bonds reflected this by [illegible] further to new lows.

Declines reached quite substantial proportions and were quite generously spread over the entire share list. The industrial average dropped to the lowest point since the middle of 1904.

Pressure against the market kept at a steady [illegible] pace with no relaxation from a persistent nature at any time. Prices seemed to be suffering more from a constant stream of liquidation than anything on the bear side, although the developments contained in the Washington dispatches were anything but reassuring.

GLOOM SPREADS

In fact, [illegible] did not appear to be much influenced by such outside events as the recommendation made to President Hoover by railroad executives. There seemed to be an undercurrent of apprehensiveness over some presently unidentified disturbance happening for which some important interests than the market has been preparing itself.

The apparent nervousness extended into the bank share market and also communicated itself into the bond section. The most unsatisfactory performance was again witnessed in railroad liens. The government list was irregular with a few Liberties higher and Treasury obligations a trifle easier.

CAUSE MYSTERY

The more immediate influence in the security situation at the week-end were the approaching important dividend meetings and the Washington situation. Developments since last Monday indicated quite convincingly that the political situation holds the leading role in important speculative considerations.

There is of course little mystery surrounding the direct cause for the uneasiness evident. It relates primarily to the confused outlook with respect to a balanced federal budget and an equitable tax program which would dispel much of the uncertainty existing toward the public works program being recommended jointly by both party leaders.

DIVIDENDS SCARCE

The latter is the latest phase of the Washington activities to attract the attention of Wall street, and regarding which considerable confusion of thought exists. Until that uncertainty is cleared up and other prerequisite legislation is enacted confidence cannot improve.

Aside from politics, dividend prospects continue an influence on price movements. Actions announced during the week were generally of an unfavorable nature. In view of this several important meetings scheduled for the coming week are being viewed with more or less concern.

IMPORTANT MEETINGS

Some evidence of this was noted in establishment of a new bear market low for American Telephone and Telegraph today. The directors of the company will hold a meeting next Wednesday. Knowledge of this caused quite a lot of selling in the face of predictions made a few days ago that the regular payment will be voted for this quarter.

Other nearby major dividend meetings include du Pont on Monday, followed by Chesapeake and Ohio, Electric Bond and Share, Atlantic Coast Line, Louisville and Nashville and Radio Corporation.

An outstanding economic statistician [illegible] made a close [illegible] between bank [illegible] thinks that within [illegible] the commodity price [illegible] begin to strengthen [illegible] the open market operations of the Federal Reserve System and other factors. He regards the Goldsborough bill which dedicates the Federal Reserve and price level as significant [illegible] the popular [illegible] expressed the opinion that in the decade starting in 1930 there will be no net decline in economic activity. In other words, he expects a comeback sufficient to offset the present subnormal period.

The economic [illegible] of one of America's premier corporations privately expresses the view that the next phase of the economic situation will not clearly emerge until after the Lausanne Conference on reparations next month. In this connection we are gradually approaching the end of the period of unsettled business. The American Presidential nominations and elections will help further to clear the air. But meantime patient waiting is not enough. The opportunity is at hand to apply managerial talent to the larger issue of organizing for a restoration of normal economic conditions.

MANAGED MONEY

Executive officers of the banks complain of [illegible] opportunity to supplement their salaries with outside income.

The Federal Reserve System, as its open market policy foreshadowed, has [illegible] advantage of the [illegible] of the Glass-Steagall Act, which authorizes it to substitute government bonds for commercial paper as partial collateral behind Federal Reserve notes. The [illegible] a step toward a managed currency within the limitations of the gold standard.

TA-KHAI AND THE BIRD FENG—

TA-KHAI, Prince of Tartary, dreamt one night of a beautiful Princess. On waking, he painted her portrait; then wandered everywhere showing it and asking all he met whether they knew her. None did. Despairing, he was about to kill himself. The Bird Feng, a marvelous creature of magical powers and a feathered perfect lady as well, appeared to him and asked him what was the matter. He showed her the portrait. She recognized it as that of the Princess of China. The Bird Feng carried Ta-Khai to the wall of the Princess's garden and taught him how to make bamboo pipes whose music would fill the heart of the listener with love for the player. Ta-Khai piped. The Princess sent for him. He found his dream girl all he had hoped—which is luck almost nobody else ever has. Whenever he thought her love waning, he piped to her and it flamed afresh. When she had doubts, she piped to him with equally satisfactory results. If the secret of Ta-Khai's pipes had not been lost there probably might be no need of our divorce courts—unless, of course, the pipes got stolen.

Using Rats In Classroom To Study Foods

"Slide," "Slip," "Flo" and "Flee," the Four White Rats in Their Cages at the Vincennes, Indiana, Junior High School, Where the Children Observed in the Rats the Effect of Proper and Inadequate Diet.

Miss Letty Wampler, the Teacher of the Home Economics Class, Who Conceived the Idea of Using Rats in the Classroom.

These Pupils Have Been Appointed Official Caretakers of the Rats and Are Very Proud of Their "Pets."

A Careful Record of the Weight of the Rats Is Made Every Day.

There are many text books which have a great deal to say about vitamins and calories, but to this teacher the facts seemed [illegible] and dull presented this way. That's why she got the rats.

At the start of the course, Miss Wampler put her quartet of white rats on her desk and explained that rats react much the same as human beings to the food they eat. Food which is bad for a boy or a girl is also bad for a rat. Food that keeps a rat healthy and husky will do the same for a human being. She pointed out that the rats were all of the same age and in the same physical condition.

Day after day the girls of the home economics class prepared meals. Some of the food they cooked was served to the rats. Two of the rats were fed on what might be called the great American diet—meat, potatoes, white bread, and coffee. These animals became nervous and irritable. They didn't sleep well. Soon they began to look thin and scrawny.

The other two rats were fed plenty of green vegetables, fresh fruit and milk, in addition to meat. They gained weight steadily. Their eyes were bright and they frisked around in their cages. They radiated pep. It did not seem possible that they could be brothers and sisters of the weak, sickly-looking rats, named Slip and Slide by the girls who were intrigued with the idea of actually seeing what happens when rats or humans eat good food combinations, or the opposite. The healthy rats were nicknamed Flo and Fly.

So popular did Miss Wampler's method of demonstrating the value of proper food become that her rats were exhibited in other of the city's schools and at several meetings of citizens who developed a sudden interest in diet and rats.

Treasure Hunters Worry Government

BURIED treasure alleged to have been hidden in various sections of this country by Captain Kidd and other swashbuckling pirates, until recently has been the cause of considerable worry and expense to the Coast and Geodetic Survey of the Department of Commerce.

It had been the practice of the Survey, when locating sites for its hydrographic and magnetic stations and determining the elevation above sea level of given points, to set out at appropriate points its various reference markers.

Formerly these markers were concrete or cement blocks which were buried in the ground in an upright position, with the tops only remaining bare. Usually these were covered with dirt and twigs to lessen the possibility of discovery.

The presence of a few characters on the top of the posts—characters that were meaningless to the layman, though they told their story to the men connected with the Survey—gave an air of mystery and antiquity to the posts and moved persons possessed of vivid imaginations to suspect they marked the hiding places of buried treasure. In feverish haste and with great secrecy they dug up the posts in the hope of unearthing a fortune—and were rewarded for their labors by nothing more valuable than a hole in the ground and a concrete block.

Evidently intent on making the best of a bad bargain, the treasure hunters put the posts to various uses. Some were used as anchors for boats, others as doorsteps for cabins, and at least one served as a headstone in a lonely graveyard. A resident of Florida had 23 of the markers, worth $5,000, made into a unique bake oven.

Now the Coast and Geodetic Survey uses circular bronze tablets in place of the alluring concrete markers. Each tablet bears an inscription indicating its purpose and a warning that a $250 fine, imprisonment, or both, will be meted out to anyone who tampers with or removes the object.

"Spirituals" From Etruscan Tomb

WITHIN the past few years, archeologists seeking new knowledge of the ancient Etruscan race, which had reached a remarkably high state of civilization before it was conquered by the Romans three and a half centuries before Christ, have unearthed enough relics to fill a large museum. But it was only recently that they had the rare good luck to come upon four little bronze figurines which far surpass in conception and workmanship all similar examples of Etrurian art.

These sculptures, which were taken from a tomb in the Province of Brogoli, appear to have been the work of some genius whose imagination and talent equalled that of the best Greek and Roman sculptors of his day. They are called "spirituals" because they, obviously, were buried with the dead to play the role of spiritual companions on the mysterious journey beyond the grave.

Unlike many of the earlier and cruder creations of Etruscan artists, these splendidly wrought "spirituals" have a refinement of line of which a sculptor of the present day might well be proud. Particularly striking is the manner in which the faces of the figurines are given human and individual expression.

The scientists believe that they have made a priceless find in the four "spirituals" and that they have, perhaps, salvaged for posterity the entire inspired output of an artist who far surpassed his contemporaries in talent, who was years ahead of his time in conception and technique and who probably forever will remain a nameless genius.

A Lion Breaks Loose at a Fashionable Restaurant, Gamblers Ruined at the Casino Killed Themselves, and Other Tragic Suicides Spoil the Season

Infuriated by the Lights and Noise, the Angry Lion Climbed the Bars, Clawed Through the Top of the Cage and Leapt Out on the Floor Where the Most Fashionable Men and Women of Riviera Society Were Gathered at a Banquet. Facing the Beast Were Lady Asquith and Other Notables.

The Fashionable Restaurant des Ambassadeurs, Next to the Municipal Casino, Showing the Cage from Which the Angry Lion Escaped.

PARIS, May 5.

THE season which is drawing to a close on the gay Riviera has been marred by a series of distressing events which have made that region a good deal less gay than it is supposed to be.

An angry lion broke out of a cage at a noted restaurant in Cannes, while some of the most fashionable and distinguished women in Europe were dining and dancing there. For a few minutes there seemed a possibility of a catastrophe too shocking to contemplate—an encounter between an enraged wild beast and the fine flower of civilization.

The next day at a nearby resort the daughter of the former President of Finland tried to kill her lover and killed herself in a projected double suicide. She also had had gambling losses.

A few days later Mrs. Ella Bjorkman, wife of an American author, committed suicide at Nice, as a result of losses at the gaming table, as she wrote.

All these distressing events happened in the area of which Nice, Cannes and Monte Carlo are the most important points, and which draw their prosperity largely from their gambling tables. Many other incidents of a somewhat less spectacular character have also helped to deepen the atmosphere of gloom. Never were the gambling casinos in greater need of patronage, and the things that have been happening are a good illustration of the saying that it never rains but it pours.

The Daring Madame Sarah Caryth, Principal Lion Tamer, Who Directed the Exciting Work of Driving the Lion From the Dining Room Back to the Cage.

The Restaurant des Ambassadeurs, adjoining the Municipal Casino of Cannes, one of the most luxurious establishments at the resort, was giving the great entertainment of the season, a gala dinner and ball. To make it very thrilling and original, a troupe of fierce Abyssinian lions and lionesses were to perform in a cage in the dining room, while the fashionable men and women were dining and dancing.

Conspicuous among those present was the Countess of Oxford and Asquith, widow of England's Prime Minister and author of incomparable memoirs. Then there was Lord Louis Mountbatten, cousin of the Prince of Wales, and his wife, the richest woman in England. Another distinguished figure was Mme. Paul Dubonnet, formerly Jean Nash, noted as the best dressed and most extravagant woman in the world.

Others were the Grand Duke and Duchess Boris of Russia, the Prince de Chimay, Count Ludy Salm, former husband of Millicent Rogers, and a host of others well known in European and American society.

The lordly Negus dressed in barbaric splendor, spear in hand, seated on a throne, ordered his slaves to make the lions and lionesses perform. The daring Sarah Caryth was the principal lady lion tamer. Olympe Bradna and the acrobats Naldi and Rey were the unhappy Christian captives. The trainer with her whip ordered the beasts to take their places on the stools provided for them. Most of them obeyed with a disgusted air.

But one of the lions was not resigned to civilized life. The sight of so many beautiful women in low-cut, jewel-covered evening costumes, the lights, the smell of food, the strange sounds of modern music maddened him. Uttering blood-curling roars, the tawny beast sprang to the top of his cage and with a few strokes of his mighty paws clawed his way through to freedom.

A panic struck the crowd of diners who had been laughing and flirting a moment before. Some rushed to the door, but only a few could get out. It seemed as if a shocking disaster must happen.

"The big yellow cat landed among the tables with a mighty roar," says one of the spectators. "Women screamed, several fainted, tables were knocked over, china and glassware crashed. But Lady Asquith, who is notoriously unimpressed by lions, arose and calmly advanced on the snarling intruder. 'Play!' she ordered the band, and 'Happy Days Are Here Again' beat on the air.

"Lady Asquith looked at the lion, and the lion looked at Lady Asquith, and probably no one will ever know what passed between them. But finally the trainer of the lion came into the room and drove him into his cage."

Madame Paul Dubonnet, who is a woman of spirit, a striking figure and a born leader of men, also performed valuable services in calming the frightened gathering. She told them to be quiet, as noise, shrieking or sudden movements would increase the beast's fury.

The work of securing the lion was a difficult one and an exciting operation. An electrician was ordered to throw a strong light into the animal's eyes. A hose was also turned on him. Confused and terrified, he did not know which way to turn. Thus the danger that he might deliberately leap upon some woman, whose brilliant costume had caught his eye, was lessened. Then the trainer and her assistants threw ropes around the lion and he was dragged into his cage. Soon the frightened ones were dancing to the strains of Billy Arnold's "Novelty American Jazz Band." Considerable regret was expressed over a number of fine dresses torn and spoiled in the excitement.

The Luxurious Municipal Gambling Casino of Cannes, Adjoining the Restaurant des Ambassadeurs, Where the Lion Episode Happened.

The suicide of Madame Kristi Martenson, daughter of the late Dr. Stahlberg, President of the Republic of Finland, was the most serious tragedy that has lately overshadowed the gay Riviera. This tragedy happened at a hotel at beautiful Cap d'Ail, which is near the border of the tiny principality of Monaco. Madame Martenson, a charming blonde of true Scandinavian type, was the wife of Colonel Martenson, of the Finnish army, a man of prominence in the army and in public life in Finland.

Recently she leased an apartment in Paris, and the Colonel having important affairs at home left his wife much of the time by herself. In any case she was an independent sort of woman and was busy with a project of starting a great department store in Finland, which was to have interesting French and American features. Shortly after Christmas, feeling the need of a warmer climate, she went to the Riviera.

There she played at the gambling tables of Monte Carlo and lost, as most people do. Although her gambling losses were not the chief cause of the tragedy of her life, it is likely that they added to her desperation. At the tables she met a good-looking young Turk, the Prince Ben Ayah Salih, who was also gambling. He expressed sympathy with her bad luck, and this led to a friendship, which progressed rapidly.

The Turkish Prince became madly infatuated with the blond northern woman, as frequently happens to men of dark-skinned races. She returned his affection, but the affair did not make her happy. She became sad and moody and avoided her many friends of the Scandinavian colony. The Prince was a member of a family that had held the highest offices under the old Turkish Empire for centuries and had become faithful followers of the new Republic and prominent citizens of it.

The Prince was a scientist and was supposed to be taking a post-graduate course of scientific study at Grenoble, in France, when he met the blond Madame Martenson at Monte Carlo. He too had felt the need of change of air and scenery, and unluckily for him his desire for excitement led him to the gambling tables. The Prince had a retiring Turkish wife and a little girl of ten somewhere in the background, but not usually on view, for Turkish wives do not expect to be taken to gambling rooms and casinos and fashionable restaurants. However, this case seems to show that they have more rights than is commonly supposed and that perhaps they are not altogether different from wives in other parts of the world.

The Turkish Princess ventured to ask her husband why he was staying away from home so much.

"I have been to the Casino," he admitted.

"What—three days and nights running?" asked the Turkish wife.

Finally the Turkish Prince broke down and confessed his affair with the blond Nordic siren. All these details have been gathered from the Prince since the tragedy. He ran away from his wife and sought Madame Martenson. Once in her society he succumbed completely to her charms and promised to do everything she asked.

"Do you wish to give me up?"

The poor man seems to have shown much unwillingness to do so.

"Then you must give up your wife and come with me," said the merciless woman.

The unfortunate Prince was driven nearly insane by the conflict of his emotions. His passion for the Finnish woman was unconquerable and yet his conscience was too good to permit him to desert the faithful companion of years. He returned to his wife for a time, and then Madame Martenson summoned him to a last meeting in her hotel.

She told him that if they could not live together, they must die together. In other words, they were to commit a double suicide. Practically out of his mind, the Turkish Prince consented. After a last, long embrace Madame Martenson picked up her revolver and shot herself near the heart.

As she fell back mortally wounded she handed the revolver to her lover to shoot himself. But the sight of suffering and approaching death had changed his views. He ran towards the door and cried for help. Seeing that he was not going to keep his bargain, the dying woman had the merciless courage and determination to take the revolver from him and fire a shot into him. Fortunately for him, her failing strength upset her aim slightly.

Then she fired another shot into herself and fell back dead. The hotel employees, aroused by the shots and cries, arrived on the spot. The Prince was carried away to the hospital and hovered for a time between life and death, but according to the last report he had a good chance of recovery, although he is likely to suffer permanently from the effects of his love romance.

"I wish I had stuck to my scientific studies, and stayed away from Monte Carlo," moaned the unhappy Prince in the hospital.

Colonel Martenson arrived in a few days and quietly took away the body of his misguided wife.

A pathetic tragedy was that of Mrs. Ella Mae Bjorkman, wife of the American author, Edwin Bjorkman. She slashed her left wrist and drank a large quantity of nitrate of silver in her hotel room at Nice. When found, she was dying and never recovered consciousness after her removal to the hospital, where she died in a public ward.

Mrs. Bjorkman left a note saying that gambling losses were the reason for her suicide. She arrived at Villefranche on the Riviera on March 16, aboard an Italian liner from New York, and played nightly at a local casino for nearly a month. Her losses at baccarat were said to have been heavy. As an author's wife it is presumed she did not have a great amount of money to lose. What she lost was an irretrievable disaster to her.

An example of the minor misfortunes that have disturbed the serenity of the Riviera was the case of Mohammed Ahmin, a twenty-four-year-old Egyptian student who attacked an old woman and snatched a satchel containing $150 from her. The reason for his outrageous lapse from scholastic rectitude is said to have been losses at the gambling tables. A crowd caught Mohammed Ahmin and started to lynch him, but he was rescued and taken to the police station.

Nice feels a certain sadness because Mrs. Charlotte Nixon Nirdlinger, the American prize beauty, has apparently deserted the capital of the Riviera, and decided to spend her wealth in America. Mrs. Nixon Nirdlinger owes a great deal to Nice, for when she shot her husband, a jury of its citizens decided that she had done it in self-defense and acquitted her with every mark of sympathy and French courtesy. Through the decision of an American court she has recently received $1,000,000 from the estate of her husband. She and her husband had a beautiful villa at Nice, and it was hoped that she would continue to enjoy the many charms and advantages of the Riviera resort, but it will not surprise American that she has developed a certain aversion to the scene of her tragedy.

Embarrassing and undesirable episodes are reported not only from the Riviera, but from other resorts which are known chiefly for their gambling casinos. At Le Touquet, near Boulogne-sur-Mer on the English Channel, Prince Lucien Alfonso de Bourbon, a disreputable relative of the King of Spain, was condemned to six months' imprisonment and a fine of $400 for passing a check for $6,000 at the Casino which was returned marked "no funds." Upon appeal the sentence was reduced to a fine of $20 and a suspended term.

It is undesirable for a Casino to be forced to make known the fact that one of its boasted princely visitors, one who should attract the "nouveaux riches," is a swindler, but $6,000 is a serious matter. Le Touquet has made a strong attempt to attract the most fashionable set of English and Americans, and alluring stories have been printed of the enormous sums won night after night at its tables by innocent little dancing girls and other favorites of fortune. It received a black eye recently when a party of fashionable and titled English people, returning in an airplane from a week-end amid its gayeties fell and were all killed.

"Turn Left"

This Is the Palm Oil Industry in Madugari. The Women Have Erected a Shelter to Keep Off the Sun and the Terrific Tropical Rains.

GOVT. STATION 5
DUNCURUM

The Native Traffic Cop in the Village of Maidugari, West Africa. There's Practically Nothing for Him to Do at the Community's "Busiest Corner," but He Likes His Job and Takes His Small Responsibilities Very Seriously.

Natives of the Village Dancing to Celebrate the Arrival of an Oil Caravan.

NIGERIA, that hot, wet country [illegible] away [illegible] of Africa's West Coast, is a sprawling [illegible] jungle [illegible] times the size of England. Its population, mostly [illegible] half that of England. That is a statistical way of saying that Nigeria is hardly a congested [illegible] which [illegible] are such nuisances as [illegible] and traffic problems.

It may be that there are a hundred [illegible] intersections in the whole country where, for a few hours a day, traffic is heavy enough to require the attention of a policeman. None of these [illegible] busy spots are in the [illegible] of Madugari, yet Madugari [illegible] traffic cop who takes his [illegible] seriously. A photograph of this Nigerian limb of the law is shown at the right.

[illegible] against which he is standing [illegible] "stop-go" signal [illegible] stationary guide post indicating the direction people must go to reach the British Government station and villages with funny names like Duncurum and Badegg.

Of course there are a few motor cars in Madugari. The British military and civil officials there to administer Great Britain's protectorate over the country have cars, and so do a few traders who deal in such products as ivory and palm oil. There never is any danger of these few automobiles getting themselves involved in a traffic jam, but the lanky and turbaned cop likes to think that such danger exists and he goes through all the motions of one of "New York's finest" charged with the important job of keeping traffic flowing smoothly at Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street.

It so happens that Madugari is on the route that many exploring and hunting expeditions take on their way to Central Africa and the East Coast, so once in a while the village's lone director of traffic enjoys the privilege of showing visiting white men that his home town is an up-and-coming community with some of the aspects of such cities as London, Paris and Berlin. The moment his eye falls on the caravan of an explorer, or a big game hunter, he goes into action, officiously shooing barefoot natives off the road and gesticulating more or less wildly until the procession is safely past. He makes the most of such opportunities because it may be weeks before he gets another such chance to give evidence of Madugari's progressiveness and to exercise his own authority.

English rules of the road prevail in Nigeria. Traffic does not keep to the right; it keeps to the left. So, though the pose of the policeman indicates that a right turn is to be made, he really is signaling for an approaching vehicle to keep to the left. His long left arm is not showing the way to go, but is barring progress on that side of the highway.

The black residents of the village stand more or less in awe of this cop, who derives his authority from the powerful British Government, and he never misses a chance to impress them with his power. When a dozen or more natives pass his post in a group he shouts and blusters until they align themselves in single file even though there may not be an automobile or another pedestrian within half a mile of the spot.

Not far from his post is the village's palm oil market, where perhaps a couple of dozen ebony women and girls gather every morning and sit until late in the afternoon. They bring their supplies of oil on their heads, in jars and cans, and set up shop by putting these receptacles on the ground in front of them. The traffic cop makes a great to-do when the oil sellers arrive in the morning and when they leave the market at night. He waves them into line and cocks an eagle eye on the procession to see that no one starts until he gives the word.

It must not be imagined that this seemingly comic cop has a soft job, however, for in his part of Africa the weather is either stiflingly hot and humid, or the clouds are weeping with tropical violence. It is not uncommon, during the long rainy season, for a storm to last for a solid month.

Being a conscientious fellow, he sticks to his post through sweltering sunshine and drenching rain even though there's little for him to do, and his salary is only a few pennies a day.

Mystery of Mixed Mummies

EGYPTOLOGISTS, believing that the mummy and the gorgeous funeral trappings of the Pharaoh Akhenaton had been unearthed in the sands of the valley of the Nile, have been thrown into a furore by the so-called inspirational writings of a young Englishman who calls himself "El Eros."

Many of the scientists scoff at the "revelations" of "El Eros," but some of them admit that there may be something in his three published books—"The Teachings of Osiris," "The Book of Truth" and "Chronicles of Osiris"—in one of which he declares that the remains of Akhenaton are still safe in the tomb in which they were laid more than 20 centuries ago. The mummy accepted as Akhenaton's is, he says, the corpse of Hmenkakere, Akhenaton's successor on the Egyptian throne.

"El Eros," aside from the fact that the great spirit of the ancient Egyptian deity occasionally forces him to write words which he himself does not pretend to understand, is a normal, athletic young man. During some of his "spells" of writing he put himself in the hands of Dr. Peter [illegible], a London psychologist, who believes that the fellow really can't help writing and that the words he writes are authentic information about the Egypt of centuries ago.

Another thing which makes several Egyptologists believe that "El Eros" may be right about the mummies of Akhenaton and Hmenkakere is the fact that his supposedly inspired writings have provided certain information about parts of the [illegible] which for centuries were hidden by sand and excavated on instructions supposedly relayed to "El Eros" by the spirit of the god Osiris.

The young man whose writings have indicated that there is [illegible] to the remains of a couple of celebrated inhabitants of ancient Egypt does not lay claim to being a seer or a spiritualist of any sort. This is another fact that gives his word weight with the men of science.

This Weird Collection of Pets, Promenaded Through the Principal Streets of Downtown Pittsburgh Recently, Was Exhibited in the Interests of Game Protection and Kindness to Animals—and Caused Thousands of People to Stare.

Pet Parade Startles City

NOW and again someone walks along the streets of Pittsburgh with an unusual pet, but never did the good citizens of that community hope to gaze upon such a sight as they beheld a few weeks ago when four good looking young women, the daughters of H. A. Heineman, appeared on busy Liberty Avenue with the strangest collection of pets imaginable.

One of the girls had two animals—a surly looking billy goat and a frightened looking groundhog (a relative of the fellow who is supposed to come out of his hole and learn the weather of the future by seeing, or not seeing, his shadow). Another of the girls had her arms full of live raccoon and another clung to the end of a tape which extended to the long neck of a huge white goose, who honked and hissed at anyone who tried to get friendly with him. The fourth Heineman sister clung to a chain to which was attached a red fox which suffered a serious attack of the jitters every time his bright eyes spotted a dog.

Before the young women had walked many blocks they had attracted a crowd of curious followers who would have become a menace to traffic if the girls had not turned in to an exhibit of live animals which the Keystone Federation of Wild Life was staging in the downtown section of the city.

A gentleman of the press, having learned of the strange parade, had joined the crowd before it arrived at the exhibition hall. He spotted a story about a new vogue in pets. The girls explained to him that they had dropped into the exhibit to see their father, who is much interested in the preservation of wild life in Pennsylvania, and that he had suggested that they take some of the animals out for an airing.

The strange parade attracted several hundred people to the live game exhibit, people who did not know that the Keystone Federation was holding a show to interest the general public in the conservation of wild life. The pets were glad to get back to the hall—and so were the young women.

Ancient Christian Mosaics of St. Sophia Restored After 500 Years

ISTANBUL.

FIVE centuries ago, when the Turks overran Constantinople (now Istanbul), they transformed the world-famous Church of St. Sophia, built by the Roman Emperor Justinian I, into a Mohammedan mosque. In this transformation the followers of the Prophet Mohammed followed his precepts to the letter and either destroyed or covered up all evidences of Christian decoration and adornment.

The priceless mosaic of Christ ruling the world, which decorated the huge dome of the edifice was lost to the world when that part of the church was razed. Many other mosaics, known to have been completed in the year 560, were plastered over with white-wash that they might not offend Mohammedan worshippers.

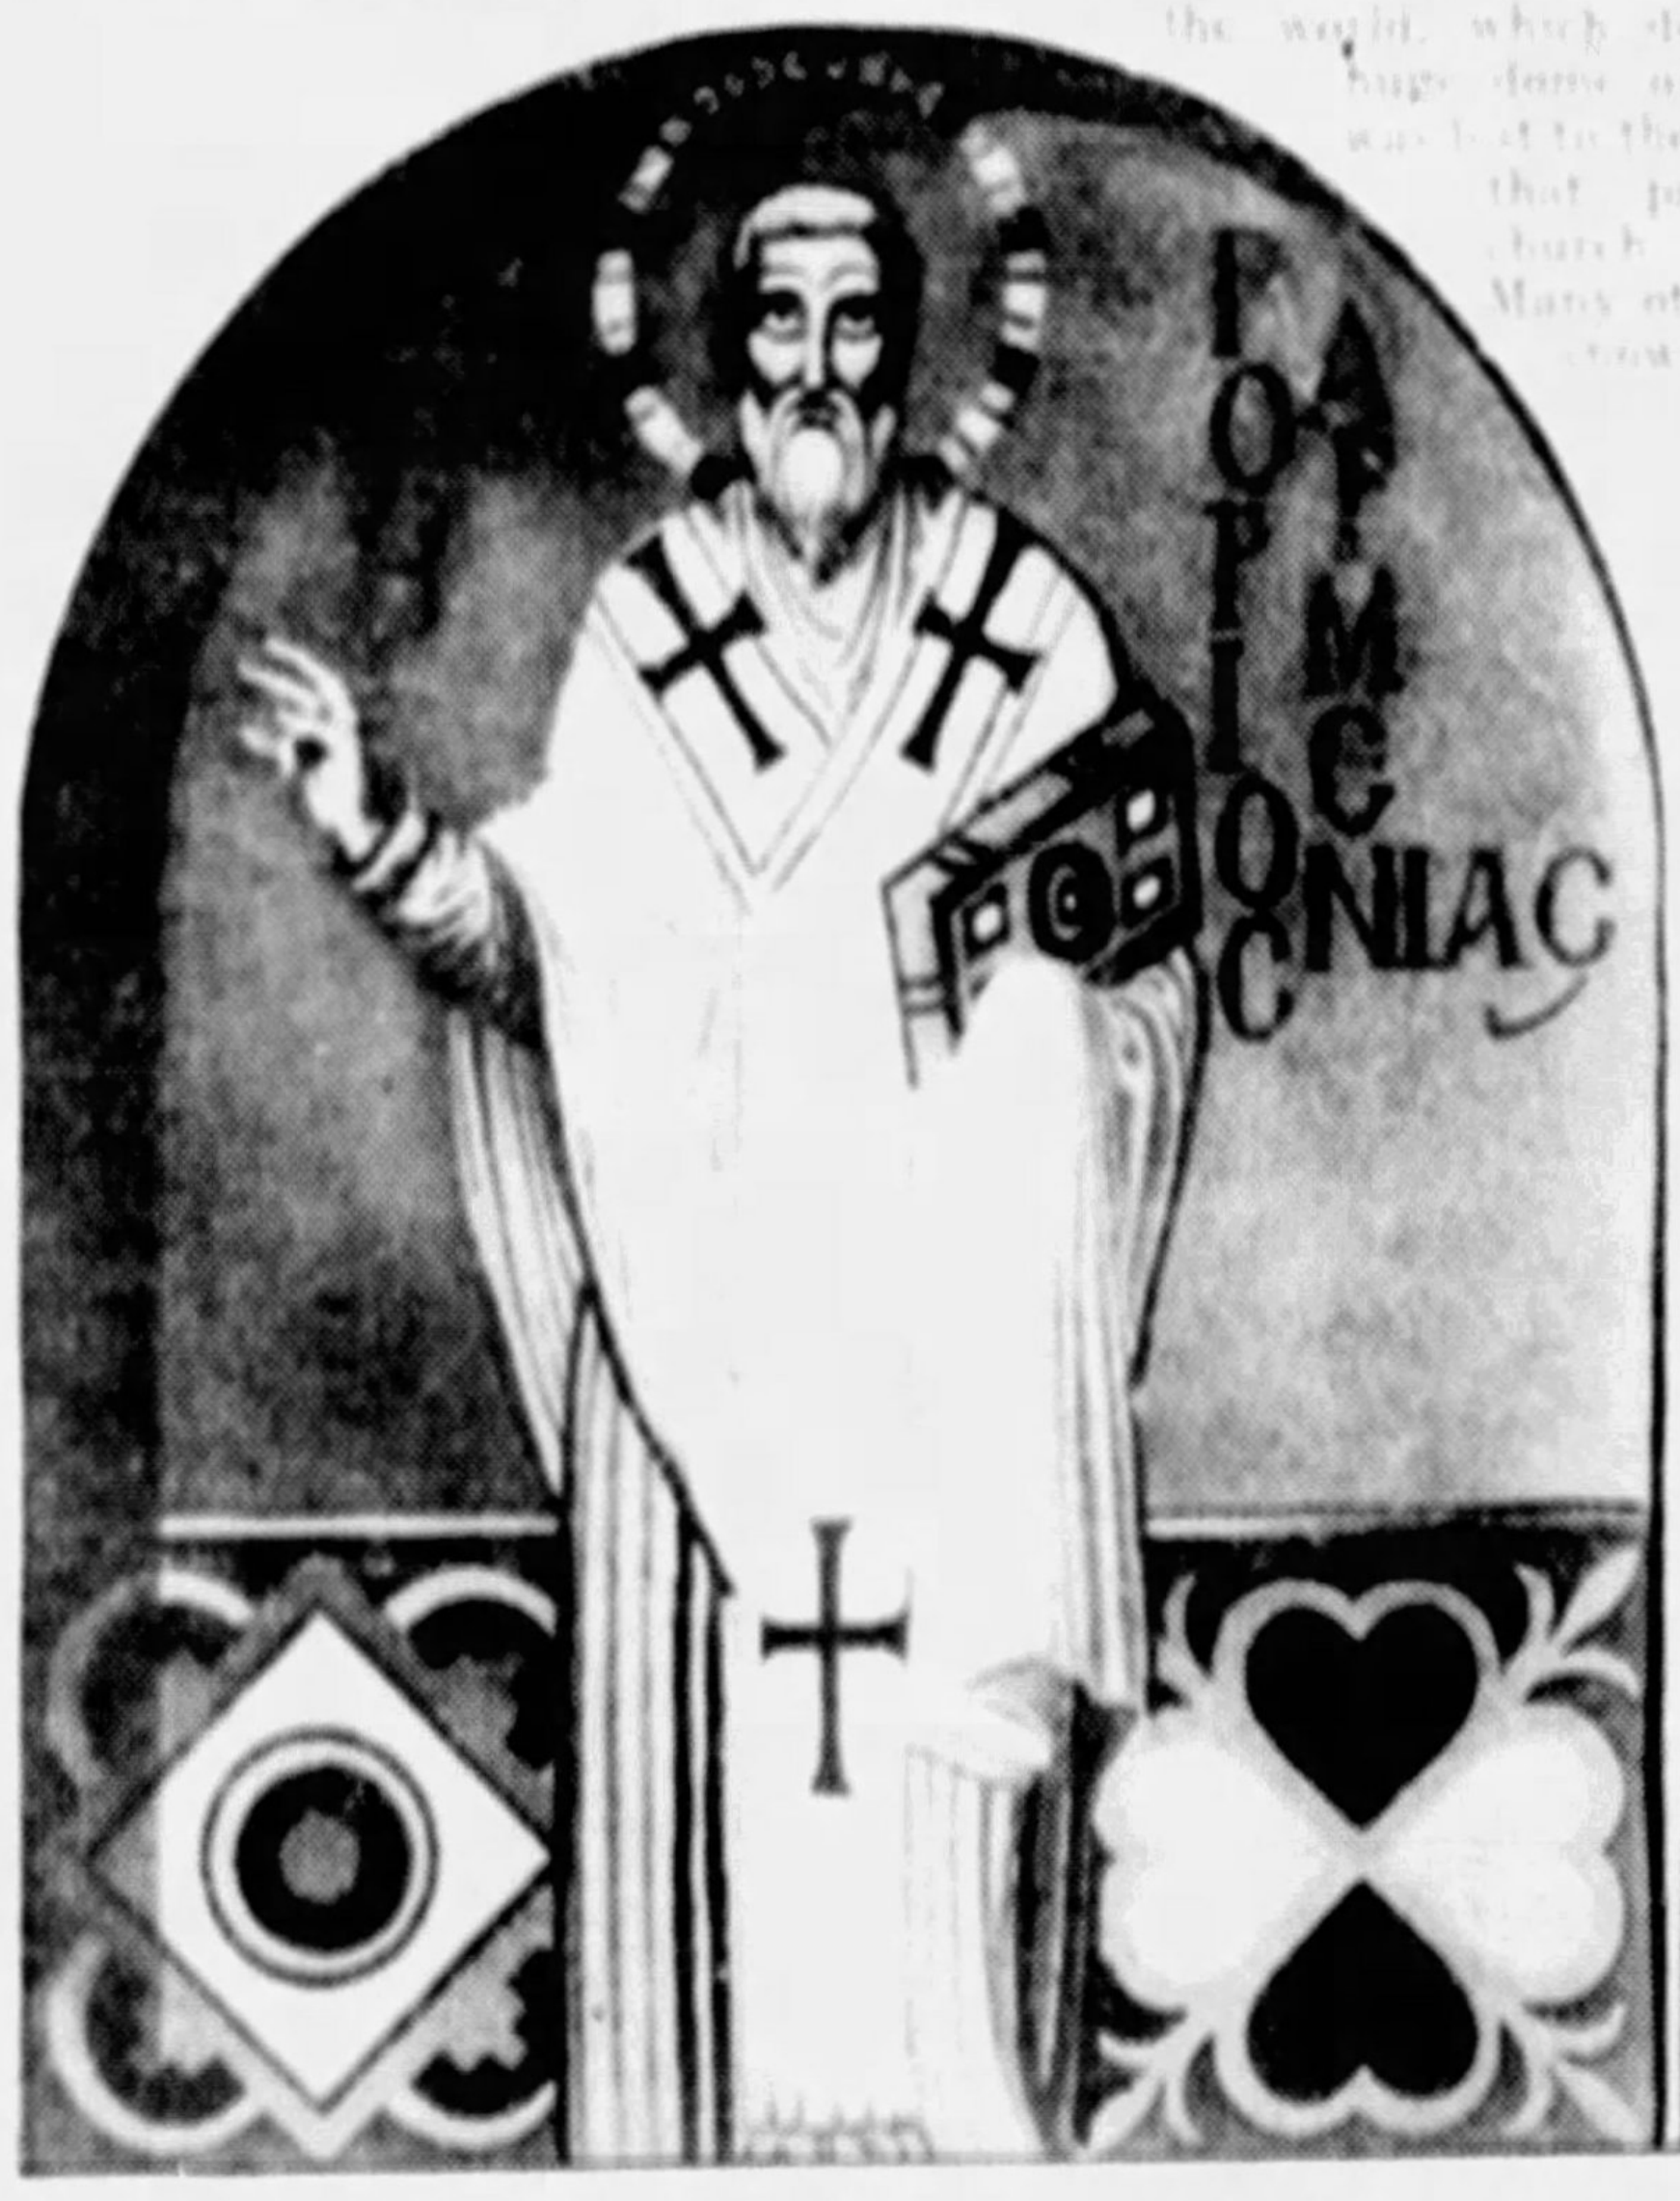
Certain of these priceless works of art recently were discovered while the interior of St. Sophia was being repaired and cleaned, and the Turkish Government undertook the work of restoring these and locating and restoring all other Christian mosaics in the structure.

The photographs below show three of the best pictures which, under the expert hand of a celebrated Italian artist, have been brought back to their ancient color and beauty. One of them is a figure of St. Gregorios. A companion panel shows St. Dionysios.

These are remarkable examples of an ancient form of artistic expression, but they are simple compared to the mosaic in which the Christian Emperor Constantine is depicted kneeling at the feet of Christ, seated on an elaborately patterned throne. In a circle at the left of the Messiah is the artist's conception of the Virgin Mary, and in another circle, on the other side of the picture, is a representation of the Angel Gabriel.

St. Sophia still is used, at times, as a Mohammedan place of worship. So, although the Turkish Government has, over the protests of a considerable portion of its population, decided to restore the ancient Christian mosiacs on the walls of the famous church, it has agreed that these decorations shall be concealed by draperies during the hours that the church serves as a mosque.

It has been estimated that the restoration work will cost at least half a million dollars and will not be completed until some time in 1938.



The Restored Mosaic of St. Gregorios, Which Has Been Brought Out After the Removal of Paint, Lime and Other Wall Coatings in the Famous Mosque, Once a Christian Church.

Behind-the-Scenes Squabbles of the Well-Known Vaudeville Headliner Revealed When His Divorced Wife and His Four "Lady Friends" Rush to Defend Him From the Separation Suit of His Second Wife Who Says He Kicked Her Shins and Hit Her in the Face With a Poodle Dog

THE present Mrs. Eddie Conrad is suing her vaudeville comedian husband for separation, mentioning among other items that while they were on stage he used to kick her shins and call her dreadful names when she was trying to be funny to the audience. Also she asserts that he hit her in the face with a poodle dog, which if true was certainly cruel and inhuman treatment to at least one of them.

This is perhaps not surprising, because stage comedians are accustomed to brightening up their divorce cases by such bits of slapstick comedy. But Eddie is more than a comedian, he is a matrimonial strategist who knows how to get women who should be his natural enemies to fight his suit for him. His second wife, Marion Eddy Conrad, names four women she says her husband was too friendly with. A lady so named, if guilty as charged, can usually be relied upon to keep far away from the trial for fear something will be proved on her.

If innocent, she is usually so furious at the husband for getting her name involved in his troubles that she would not throw him a toothpick if he were drowning, and if he asks her to come and testify for him, she says she hopes he spends the rest of his life in some alimony jail.

But guilty or innocent, Conrad's lady friends are ready to do battle for him, and even the first wife, Birdie Conrad, comes to the rescue with a long affidavit, shooting hundreds of hard words at her successor, telling the court the inside stuff about that lady and urging the judge not to give her any alimony. Mrs. Marion Eddy Conrad wants $100 a week and $2,000 counsel fees as indemnity for the alleged home-breakers, shin-kicking, dog-throwing, etc. The little comedian thinks he ought to get his freedom from his big red-headed wife free. Anyway, with all this feminine support he ought to put up some powerful resistance.

Birdie, the curiously friendly first wife, has a first mortgage of $110 a week alimony on the little comedian and since $8,000 worth of it is in default she could foreclose any time and put him in jail. As monkeys are about the only comedians who can entertain their public from behind the bars, Eddie probably could never earn that $8,000 and would stay there indefinitely. Instead of collecting her pound of flesh, Birdie is seeing to it that Marion doesn't fasten a second mortgage on Conrad, even if Birdie no longer "owns the property."

In January of this year Simon Feinstein, a New York lawyer of 1560 Broadway, opened the war by sending a heavy package to comedian Conrad's lawyer, Julius Kendler of 1540 Broadway, who thought it must be the manuscript of a Dreiser novel because it was too heavy for a play. On opening the package he found only the usual papers for a separation suit against his client plus a voluminous affidavit explaining with charming frankness why the comedian was an unsatisfactory husband. This meant the break-up of the internationally famous comedy team of Conrad and Eddy who for nearly three years had been delighting audiences in England and all over America.

On the stage the big red-headed girl made terribly serious love to the sawed-off comedian and if he kicked her shins the audience thought it part of the act. Marion says that it was just the same off stage. The love was all on her side and when she offered a little, it was always a case of numerous lady friends, of whom she mentioned four.

The first of these is Loretta Dennison, a 17-year-old vaudeville dancer whose pet name is said to be "Palsy." Marion offered in evidence a telegram to her husband, which reads:

"DEAREST ARRIVED SAFELY. SO LONESOME FOR YOU. WRITE SOON. LOVE. "PALSY."

To back this up are two photographs of Loretta, one of which is inscribed:

"To Eddie—In memory of a pleasant week spent in Washington. May we spend many more weeks like that together. Loretta."

The other was "To the sweetest buddy in the world" and with "much love, Loretta." These did not annoy the wife so much as did a slave bracelet, with the letters L. D. engraved on a plate attached to a chain that went around the comedian's wrist. In her complaint Marion says that when she and her husband were playing Washington, D. C., Eddie refused to dine with her and took his meals with Loretta. As a crowning humiliation she relates that he told the newspapermen that he was going to marry Palsy as soon as he could get rid of Marion.

"In September, 1931," Marion's summons and complaint sets forth, "I ascertained that the defendant was misconducting himself. I thereupon engaged the services of the Colonial Detective Service. One of the operators found the defendant in his room with a woman identified at the time as 'Miss Frannie' (this Miss Frannie was later named as Agnes Franey). He continued to see this woman although I asked him not to."

This Miss Franey is an unusual woman. She married the very wealthy Logan S. Metcalf of Los Angeles and left him because whenever she displeased him he refused to speak for days at a time and she found that against his silence she could not talk, either. However, his silence was golden because he offered her a settlement of $2,000,000 to come back, but this surprising young lady refused it. She doesn't care for money and, Marion says, for clothes either.

Marion Eddy Conrad brings in the names of Cherie and Ann Dennis, two members of a three-sister singing act in vaudeville. She says her husband, under the name of Arthur Davega, occupied an adjoining room to that of Cherie and Ann with a bathroom between which they all used with a spirit of communism worthy of the best Bolshevik tradition. She thinks he was specially friendly with Cherie.

It took Conrad a month to write his comeback, which is not surprising considering that it was seventy-nine pages long. Also he had collaboration. There was also a lengthy affidavit from wife No. 1. Husbands and wives have sometimes been co-authors of fiction. Professor and Madame Curie collaborated on scientific papers, but this is probably the first time that a former wife joined pens with her divorced husband in defending him against a reigning wife.

Birdie's affidavit states that she and Conrad were married and divorced, leaving her stuck with two children as against $110 a week alimony to support them on. This, however, turned out to be more or less "stage money," because she is now destitute, with $8,000 of it uncollected. She writes:

"I am impelled to make this affidavit not for the purpose of in any way extenuating the injuries which have been perpetrated against me and my children by my ex-husband, but by a desire to attempt to protect my children and myself against any measures employed by the plaintiff (Marion Eddy Conrad) in the action for a further jeopardizing our only means of sustenance—particularly in view of the fact that I charge the plaintiff, who is well able to maintain herself by her recognized talents as an actress, to be the direct, responsible cause of the defendant abandoning me and our children and breaking up our home after we had been happily married for over ten years. I further charge that she, in a great measure, has been responsible by her extravagance since her marriage to the defendant for the latter's delinquency in the payment of alimony due me under the order of the court."

Birdie relates that when she first met the lady who was to supplant her she did not dream that Marion was going to "steal her husband." She began to suspect it, however, from the day when she says she found the two together in the same room of a New York hotel. The suspicion was confirmed a few weeks later when Eddie walked out on her, never to return.

Birdie closes her affidavit in defense of her ex-husband with these words:

"If it be charged that I am vindictive I would not deny it, and I maintain that I have the right to be so. This affidavit is made only for the purpose of disclosing to the court that the plaintiff, in a cunning, diabolical and conniving manner, plotted and succeeded in taking my husband away from me."

Marion Conrad was stunned by this attack from an unexpected quarter, but not for long. Back she came with a counter attack accusing Birdie among other things of negligence in not putting Eddie in jail where all husbands who get behind in their alimony reparations should be kept. She writes:

"It is rather unusual for a former wife to make an affidavit in support of, and to come to the rescue of an ex-husband who now finds himself in another matrimonial entanglement. I presume much pressure and coercion was resorted to, prior to obtaining said affidavit.

"What is her underlying motive in making this affidavit? Why did Birdie Conrad permit the defendant to become indebted to her in the sum of $8,000 when she well knew that the defendant was earning upwards of $500 per week, that contempt proceedings could have been instituted and the defendant committed to jail for non-payment thereof, yet no steps were taken by her?"

Recalling a time in 1931, when the first Mrs. Conrad brought the children to a theatre on Long Island to see their papa and his new wife on the stage, she says they all had a pleasant family chat.

"I told her," writes Marion, "that it was impossible for me to get along with Eddie, and she said that she knew all about that—that he was a 'lousy' husband and didn't know how to be a real husband. She told me I was welcome to him."

The four women named by Marion deny anything but the most proper relationship with the comedian and have intimated that when the time comes they, too, "will tell one." Miss Cherie Dennis has already done so in her affidavit quoting Marion as having admitted an affair with Sol Gold, a vaudeville dancer, accused by Eddie of being Marion's boy friend.

In accusing his second wife of misconduct with Gold, Eddie introduced scenes and lines worthy of an old-time A. H. Woods boudoir farce. On finding his wife in the same room with Gold, he claims to have said to him:

"This is my wife, as you know. There are forty women on the bill at this theatre. [illegible] of them, single except my wife. I want you to get away from here and let her alone."

Mr. Gold looked as if he thought the husband's request was not unreasonable, but Eddie says his wife answered:

"Why don't you go away and mind your business? There is nothing wrong here."

In Washington, states Conrad's affidavit, he found Marion, dressed in pyjamas, in the same room with Gold and another vaudeville team—a man and a woman. This woman was wearing a nightie.

From these and many other alleged occurrences the comedian jumps to the conclusion that Gold and Marion rather liked each other.

"IN 1929, I COULDN'T HAVE BUILT THIS CAR"

WALTER P. CHRYSLER TELLS HOW THE NEW AND FINER PLYMOUTH WAS MADE . . . . .

There's a dramatic story behind this new 1932 Plymouth. It's a story written in sweat—the sweat of good, hard work—and plenty of it.

Two years ago, the New Plymouth could not have been built. If you had told me then that such a big, powerful, beautiful automobile could be made to sell for as low as $495, I'd have said, "Impossible."

But the depression gave us an entirely new viewpoint. It spurred us on to accomplish the seemingly impossible.

Fortunately, we had the stuff to work with—the experience, the engineering brains, the modern production methods.

It wasn't an easy job we tackled, but now it's done, I can't help but take pride in it.

The New Plymouth, I honestly believe, is the finest low-priced car that ever rolled off any assembly line; bar none.

It is as big, as powerful; and it is faster, easier-handling and ten times as smart as cars that sold for twice as much in 1929.

Just compare it with the other two cars in its price class. You'll agree the Plymouth is a bigger car, a better-looking car, a longer car, a finer car.

Plymouth has everything you could want in an automobile today. Floating Power. Free Wheeling. Silent-Second, Easy-Shift Transmission. It's smooth-running, the easiest-riding car I ever drove. It's packed with quality.

Again let me urge you, go and see the New Plymouth with Floating Power. Look at all three cars in the lowest-priced field and don't buy any until you do. That's the sure way to get the most for your money.

10 MODELS—Business Roadster $495, Business Coupe $565, 2-door Sedan $575, Sport Roadster $595, Sport Phaeton $595, Coupe (with rumble seat) $610, 4-door Sedan $635, Convertible Coupe $645, 7-passenger Sedan (121-inch wheelbase) $725, Convertible Sedan $785. THRIFT MODELS—2-door Sedan $495, 4-door Sedan $575. All prices f. o. b. factory. Low delivered prices. Convenient time-payments. All enclosed models wired for Philco-Transitone radio.

Patented FLOATING POWER . . . 65-H. P. Engine . . . Free Wheeling . . . Silent-Second, Easy-Shift Transmission . . . Safety-Steel Bodies . . . Rigid-X Double-Drop Frame . . . Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel's as others see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us,
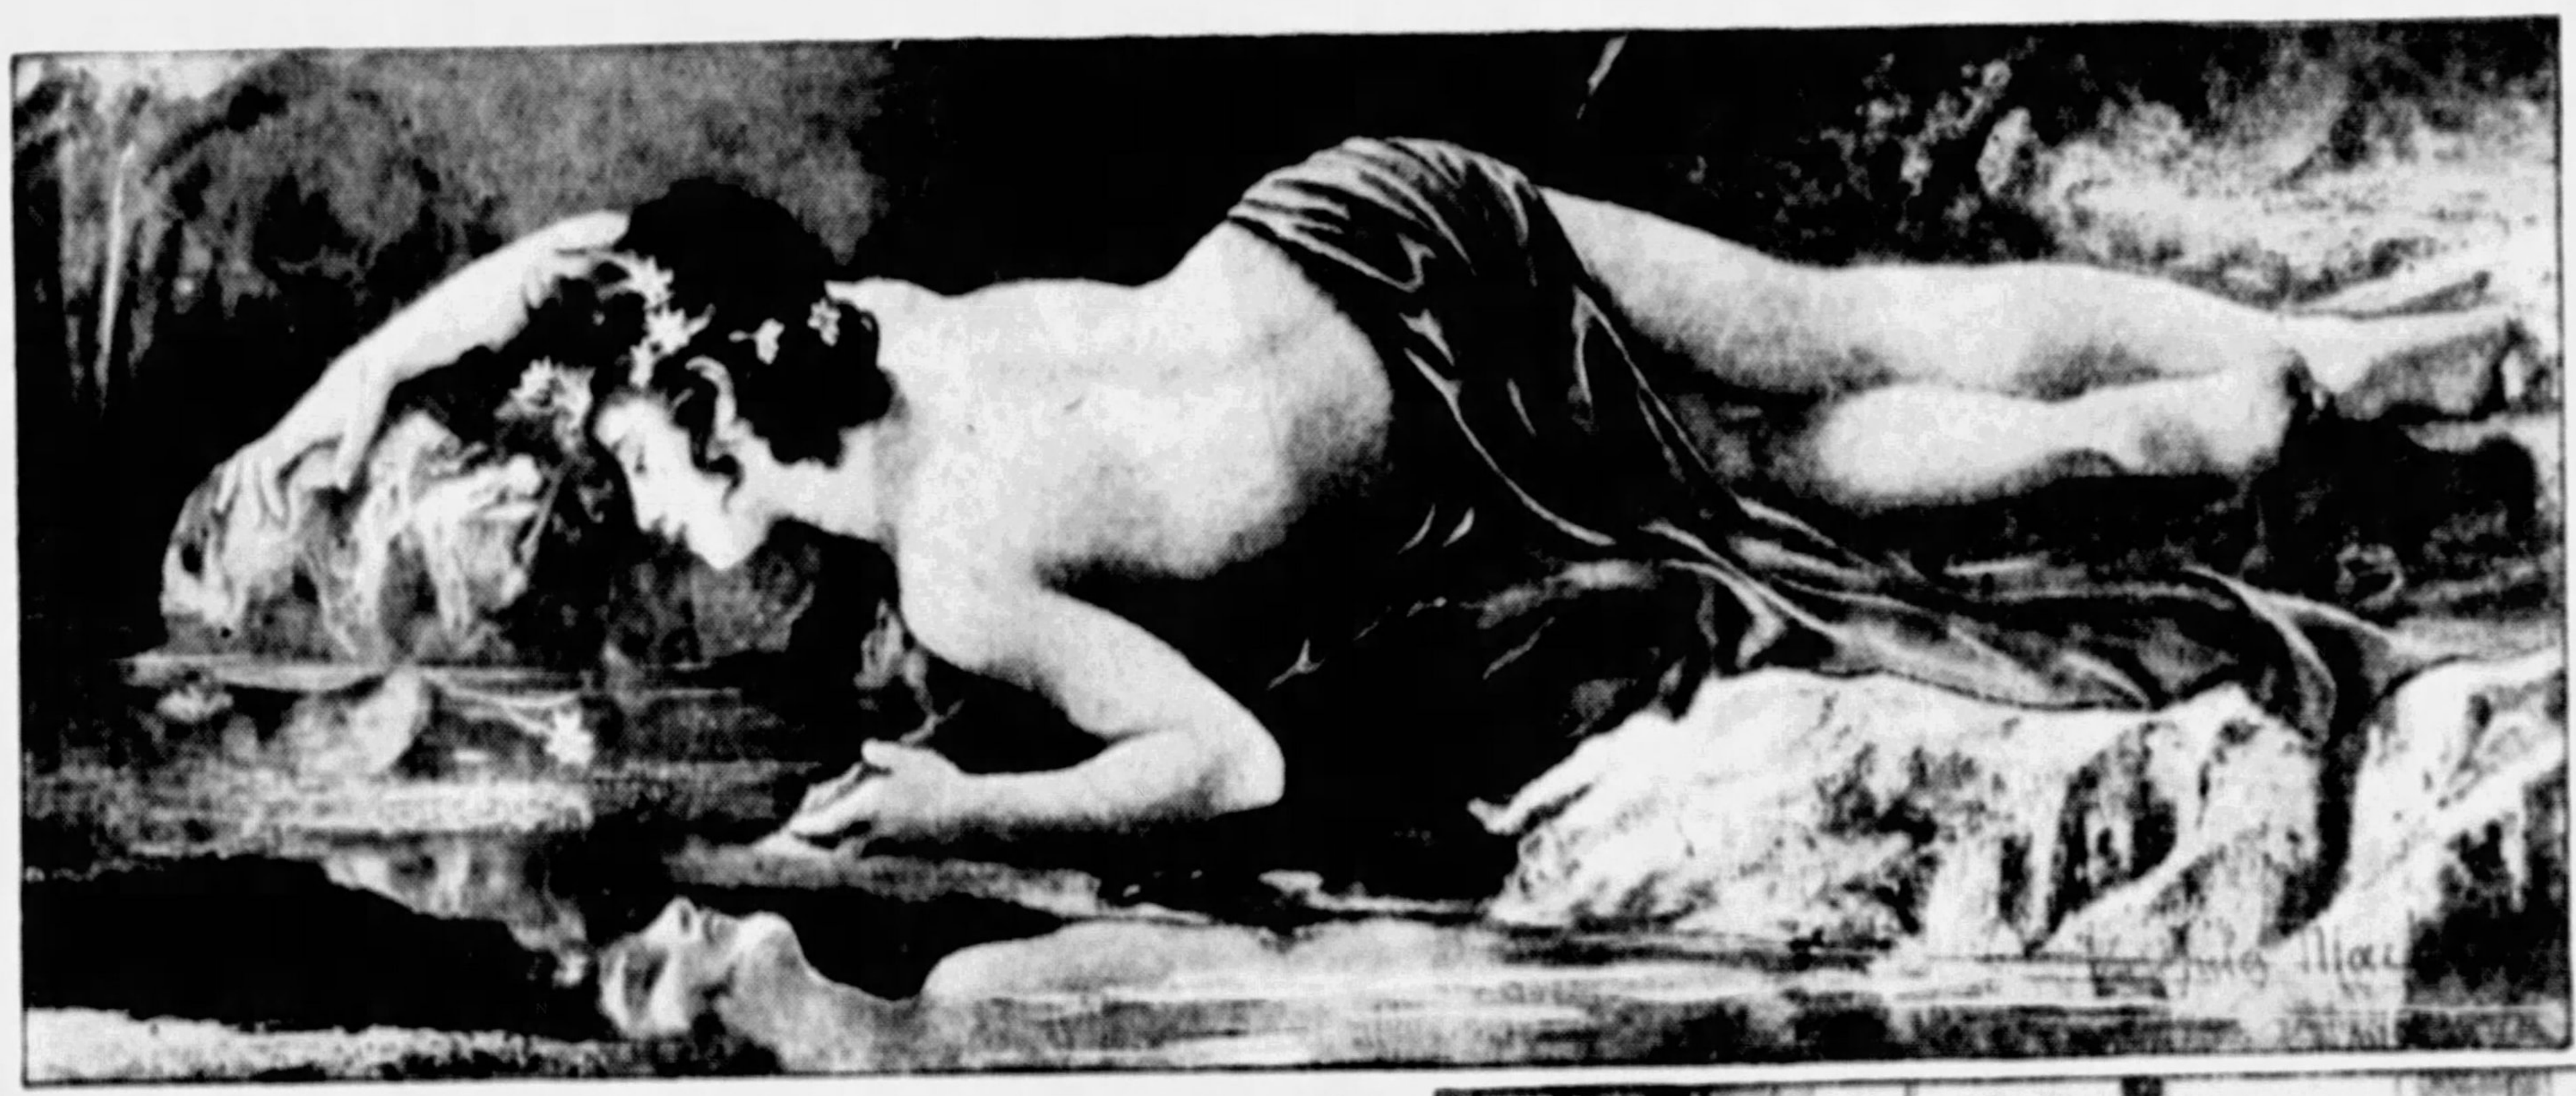
—ROBERT BURNS.

WHEN the Scotch poet Burns wrote his famous lines, he suspected what science has now definitely proved, that most people think too highly of themselves. Of course, the loud-mouthed, conceited braggart is easily discovered, but it turns out that the quiet, demure person also usually overestimates his or her virtues and underestimates the bad qualities.

Science has devised a simple mirror which fairly well reflects the distorted notions the individual is likely to hold of his qualities, good or bad, and the more accurate picture presented by the estimate of more unbiased observers.



Narcissus Was a Young Greek God Who Saw the Reflection of His Face in a Pool and Became So Entranced With His Beauty That He Pined Away and Died. If He Had Filled in the Questionnaire, He Would Doubtless Have Given Himself a Score of 100 Plus. From Painting by Jules Machard.

To a marked degree we are all more or less like the mythological Narcissus, who, on seeing himself for the first time as he leaned over a clear pool to drink became so enamored with himself that he became utterly worthless. He could think of nothing but his great beauty and finally pined away and became a flower. Deluded often times by our false high opinion of ourselves, say the scientists, we frequently attempt things beyond our capabilities and so become failures.

Mlle. Polaire, Who Has No Illusions About Her Lack of Beauty. She Has Capitalized Her Ugliness and Emphasized It In Every Way and Made a Stage Success As "The Ugliest Woman in the World."

Illusions as to personal beauty are common enough; history is full of women and men of very plain features who could not see their own ugliness. Now and then a woman is found who has no illusions about her lack of beauty. Thus Mlle. Polaire, the French actress, recognized and capitalized her ugliness, emphasized it in every way and made a stage success by declaring herself "the ugliest woman in the world."

The Former Kaiser Has Been Called the Most Egotistical Man of Modern Times. Only Recently He Is Quoted As Having Said That In Looking Back Over His Life He Cannot See That He Made Any Mistakes.

Egotism is a common fault, and the former Kaiser has been pointed to as the most egotistical man of modern times. Only recently he is quoted as having said that in looking back over his life he could not see that he had made any mistakes, and if he had his life to live again he would do exactly as he had done.

"Beau" Brummel Was Justified In His Sense of Superiority Over Other Men of His Time, When He Persuaded Men and Women of Fashionable British Society to Take a Bath Now and Then and Wear Clean Clothes.

But the Late Harry Lehr, When He Introduced New Fashions and Monkeyshines Into Fashionable Society In Newport, Was Laughed At As a Clown.

"Beau" Brummel, on the other hand, was justified in his sense of superiority over other men of his time. Few people in fashionable British society took a bath at that period, and they covered up the odors they carried about with them by heavy doses of perfumes. Brummel knew he was right when he persuaded his contemporaries to take a bath now and then, and wear clean clothes. But when the late Harry Lehr introduced new fashions and monkeyshines into Newport society, he was widely laughed at as a clown.

Just how we are blinded by this misleading and inherent self love makes a most interesting story, revealing as it does a great deal about our personal lives and fortunes which we ordinarily might never realize, and by no means the least astonishing part of it is how this self love extends its deceptive influence over our opinions of our friends and even of our material possessions, without our knowing it. The psychologists marshal an impressive array of evidence to show that just as we minimize our own faults and exalt our own virtues we similarly think over well of our friends' or relatives' abilities and tend to excuse their faults, and that in the same way we usually come to believe our doctor, dentist, college, automobile, radio or other possessions to be the best, regardless of truth.

The psychologists do not deny that this has its good as well as its bad side. They point out that it is what makes for the loyalty that brings support and progress to cities, business organizations and nations; but on the other hand they say it makes for prejudice, conflict, unfairness, cruelty and war. If everyone could judge himself and the other fellow exactly, what a host of misunderstandings, quarrels, disappointments, failures and bitterness might be avoided. Yet most people, according to the scientists, though absolutely honest in intent and absolutely convinced that they are being fair in their judgment of themselves and their friends, are almost always wrong.

One of the most ingenious proofs of this puzzling pudding lies in experiments conducted by Dr. Harry L. Hollingworth, of the psychology department of Columbia University. Now, since it would be extremely difficult, not to say impossible, to get any considerable number of folk to agree, for example, as to who was the most refined, or most vulgar, or most handsome human in the world, Dr. Hollingworth devised a scheme of comparison among groups of people which enabled him to watch their judgments of themselves and others in action, much as our judgments are to be observed in action in the every day business of living. Fortunately, it was a judgment test that anyone can use for himself as will be shown later. Though the groups involved did not know it until afterward, the professor arranged things so that he was aware of just who prepared each set of judgments. They thus made judgments of themselves and others just as we do every day.

For the first of these tests the professor selected a group of twenty five persons well acquainted with one another, if not all friends. These subjects were asked to rate the whole twenty five as to these qualities: Refinement, humor, intelligence, sociability, neatness and beauty, as well as for conceit, snobbishness and vulgarity. They were to put down as No. 1 in refinement, for instance, the member of the group they held to be most refined. If one held himself to be first in that quality, he was to put down his own name first and then grade the rest as No. 2, No. 3, and so on. If they individually judged someone else to be first, others No. 2, No. 3, and so on, and themselves No. 13, for example, they were to set these judgments down in that order. Since they believed the statements were for general anonymous statistics, and no one ever would know, all boldly proceeded to make the record.

That done, the psychologist and his assistants were in a position to average up the results, and find out precisely the opinion of each one of the twenty-five as to his own refinement, etc., compared with the average opinion of him held by his friends. On a small scale, this was, in fact, just like a comparison of self opinion with world opinion of the individual; how often do we wonder what others really think of us? All sorts of startling variations were revealed. One who thought himself near the top in refinement was in the average view of his companions below twentieth. And another individual who took great credit for being humorous was in the eyes of the others about as humorous as the late Carrie Nation.

These twenty-five educated and intelligent humans, giving their honest judgment of themselves and the friends—(in secret, as they thought)—estimated themselves higher in generally desired qualities and lower in generally despised ones than was the opinion of them held by their companions.

But the sleuth of science was not content to rest there. He proceeded to make the same test over again, this time with fifty persons. The results were a verification of the first experiment, 80 per cent overestimating their possession of refinement, 78 per cent their humor, 68 per cent their intelligence, 68 per cent their sociability, 50 per cent their neatness, 50 per cent their beauty, while 52 per cent underestimated their own conceit, 64 per cent their own snobbishness and 66 per cent their own vulgarity. And what was more, in the cases of beauty and neatness, where the number overestimating and underestimating themselves was equal, the extent of overestimation was markedly greater on the average, than that of underestimation.

Indeed, so clearly indicative are the results that the conclusion might be taken as showing an average general figure measuring the usual human bias with regard to these particular qualities—this general figure being on a basis or scale of 50 numbers, 6.3 overestimation for refinement, 5.2 for humor, 3 for intelligence, 2.2 for sociability, 1.8 for neatness, 0.2 for beauty, and 1.7 underestimation for conceit, 2 underestimation for snobbishness, and 4.2 for vulgarity. Or, to put the thing more succinctly, the average human may be said to overestimate his own refinement by about 6.3 numbers on a scale of 50, and so on for the other qualities, and to underestimate his own vulgarity, for example, by about 4.2 on the same scale.

Not so long ago, as an instance, a young mechanic appealed to me for help as to how he might become a lecturer on philosophy. He had a weak voice, an uncertain manner of speech and a totally unimpressive presence, alone enough to defeat, quite probably, his success in the new field. Yet when I pointed all this out to him he protested vigorously. He actually believed his voice, speech and presence adequate. And he was eager to spoil a mighty good mechanic to make at best a very mediocre lecturer.

Now consider the curious way in which this human tendency to exalt our own good qualities and minimize our bad ones extends to our friends. Experiments conducted by Dr. Frederick B. Knight at the University of Iowa demonstrate it does. These experiments showed that almost invariably humans believe their fathers, for example, or their friends are more refined, less vulgar, more intelligent or less stupid than they actually are.

And why not, the layman may exclaim at this point, certainly such an attitude is natural enough! And so it is. But that does not make void the fact that as a result of this overestimation or underestimation, as the case may be, relatives and friends are put in jobs or urged into enterprises for which they are by no means fitted, and so doomed to failure and disappointment that may conceivably discourage or embitter them for years.

Presenting the other side of the case, the Knight research shows that, as a general thing, a casual acquaintance is better able to size up one's traits and qualities than is a close friend or kinsman. The reason being, of course, that in the judgment of friend or kinsman the old handicapper, self love, will get in the way. Your friend or relative is in the mysteriousness of the mind somehow a part of you, any disparagement of him is therefore a disparagement of yourself, and you proceed to defend or uphold him in the judgment. Whereas, the casual acquaintance is free from the handicap and therefore can make a free judgment on the basis of fact.

This same thing curiously holds true when we come to judge our possessions. These material objects become through close association and use extensions of our personality, as the psychologists say. They become all tangled up in our minds with our own ego. To possess good things inflates our ego or gives us a good opinion of ourselves, to possess bad things reflects upon us and our judgment. So it is that we make excuses for them, according to psychological principle, and readily ascribe virtues to them. Thus even a second-hand car becomes to its owner not just another second-hand car, but one of the best ever turned out of its particular factory.

In still another way, according to numerous psychological experiments, is our judgment of ourselves and of others unbalanced by self love. We are born with, perhaps, or develop some particularly striking ability, such as musical, legal, forensic or inventive talent. This gives us, naturally, a sense of power and capability, and unless we are very sure minded and intellectually honest we are apt to imagine that we are exceptional persons all around, and that all our traits and abilities, refinement, neatness, etc., are of the outstanding variety. It does not take a psychologist to point out many persons in the public eye who, because of outstanding success in business, authorship or invention, obviously think themselves authorities in politics, sociology or statesmanship.

On this page is printed a test chart of ability to judge one's own qualities. Anyone can get a fairly good picture of himself, and also see himself as others see him by carrying out the experiment in his own home.

Let the reader put down his own score of how he estimates his characteristics, good and bad, in Column 1. Then fold under his markings so they cannot be seen, and ask his most intimate friend to estimate his qualities in Column 2. Then turn this column under and out of sight, and ask some casual acquaintance to mark his estimate in Column 1. The reader then will have the figures from which he can fill out the other columns. It will be an interesting and enlightening personal adventure in psychology.

Science Puzzled to Understand Why the Cave-Dwellers Far Up on the Bleak Mountains Live to Be 100--And Why the Natives of Tristan da Cunha Island Need No Dentists

One of the Husky Old Mountaineers of the Himalayas.

TWO scientific investigations that may yield the secret of how we may live to be a hundred—and how we may have sound teeth at ninety without bothering with a dentist—are under way at two very far corners of the world.

In the loneliest of all lonely islands, Tristan da Cunha, in the South Atlantic Ocean half way between the Cape of Good Hope and South America, a British health inquiry now being conducted has shown that not only do the 156 inhabitants have no diseases, but they have also, for the most part, perfect teeth. There are old men of seventy-five who never saw a dentist and never had a cavity. It is a puzzling discovery, for the inhabitants of the odd little island go counter to every rule of oral hygiene. "A clean tooth never decays," has been widely asserted; yet the Tristan da Cunha folk never clean theirs. It is a dental axiom that hard, rough foods are desirable for strong teeth, yet the food of the islanders, mostly fish and potatoes, is all soft. And they live long and healthy lives, and are almost as agile and active at eighty as they are at forty.

And while an expedition is trying to find out why the Tristan da Cunha islanders have almost perfect teeth without taking any care of them, another curious phenomenon is being investigated far up on the wind-swept sides of the Himalaya Mountains in northern India where, it is asserted, a strange colony of dwarfish cave-dwellers living among the mountain crags reach an extreme old age. Why should these semi-civilized mountaineers in the rigorous climate and primitive surroundings and with scanty food supply reach the age of a hundred years or more?

Eleven years ago, during one of her many Asiatic explorations, Miss Jill Cossley-Batt, English woman scientist, reported the discovery of this lost tribe, nameless and uncivilized, whose members frequently attain the astonishing age of one hundred and ten years and whose women, still more astonishing to state, remain capable of child-bearing even after seventy-five years of age. She found they spoke a dialect of the ancient Chaldean language, and inscriptions on the walls of their caves were in Chaldean characters. Having no mastery of the language at that time, though in her extensive travels she had acquired a knowledge of thirteen foreign tongues, Miss Cossley-Batt found it difficult to communicate with the strange tribesmen. Since that time, however, she has made a study of Chaldean, and on her present visit to the Himalaya fastnesses she will be better equipped to study her centenarians and hopes to come back with important scientific data. She believes they are possessed of an ancient Chaldean secret of long life.

On the departure of her expedition from England, Miss Cossley-Batt was accompanied by Dr. Irvin Baird, of Edinburgh, and Montreal, noted as an explorer of the Inca ruins in South America.

Like the islanders of Tristan da Cunha, the Methuselahs of the Himalayas whom the explorer is revisiting are entirely free of diseases. Miss Cossley-Batt found six hundred of them, men, women and children, living in caves at an altitude of fourteen thousand feet in the Himalayas. Socially and economically independent, this mysterious people has had for centuries no contact with civilization. According to the explorer they are of little less than average height, inclined to be fair, neither wrinkled, despite their outdoor life, nor become gray with advancing years, and they attain an age, reckoned in time units of their ancient Chaldean calendar, of 120 to 150 years.

The Chaldean calendar, it must be remembered, counted only nine months to the year, hence a hale and hearty tribesman of 150 cannot boast more than 113 years, according to our system of reckoning with the undertaker. But that, as most people will agree, is a pretty ripe old age according to any standards.

George Bernard Shaw, whose play, "Back to Methuselah," is a satirical study of the possible effects the course of evolution may have on longevity, will find comfort in the fact that the Himalayan centenarians are strict vegetarians, for Shaw has for most of his long life refused to eat meats. In "Back to Methuselah," however, Shaw did not dwell heavily upon a vegetable diet as a contributing cause to long life. He conceived of a cult of determined "auto-evolutionists" who, by simply willing to live longer than the three score and ten to which mankind seems to have accustomed itself, were able to produce a race of Methuselahs. Their contention was, for instance, that the giraffe attained his long neck, in the course of evolutionary history, simply by stretching and stretching in order to reach the higher and tenderer buds at the top of a tree from which the giraffe family was accustomed to feed. In the course of time the insistent giraffe had attained a beautiful long neck which he was able to hand down to his children. Similarly, the longevity cult in his play, while not particularly wishing for a long neck, wished so hard for a long life that it was actually attained.

There is really no good reason, Shaw contends, why human beings should have to die, when they have just, at three score and ten perhaps, lived long enough to learn how to live wisely.

Of differing opinion was the famous physician, Sir William Osler, who in 1905 stirred the world by giving his great authority to the statement that a man's best work is done while he is under forty and that he might be chloroformed at sixty to the general benefit of society.

The theory that was to become world-famous as Oslerism was voiced by Dr. Osler at the commencement day exercises of Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore, when he said:

"Take the sum of human achievement in action, in science, in art, in literature—substract the work of men above forty, and while we should miss great treasures we would be practically where we are today. The effective, moving, vitalizing work of the world is done between the ages of twenty-five and forty.

"In that charming novel, 'The Fixed Period,' Anthony Trollope's plot hinges upon the admirable scheme of a college into which, at sixty, men retire for a year of contemplation before a peaceful departure by chloroform. That incalculable benefits might follow such a scheme is apparent to anyone who, like myself, is nearing the limit."

The world received this pronouncement with horror, disbelief, and—in the case of many ladies and gentlemen over forty—with jeers. Society has gone right on allowing people to live after sixty, and a great many useful things have been accomplished by a great many citizens ranging in years from forty and upwards.

A curious fact, brought to light many years after Osler made his remarkable declaration, is that a strange sect called "The Undergrounds," living in a remote section of the Ural Mountains in Russia, actually practices Oslerism. In a word, the members of this tribe have arbitrarily fixed the deadline of a man's life at forty years—they believe his usefulness is ended at that age and they do not permit him to wait until sixty to be Oslerized. They have decreed that every member of the tribe who reaches the age of forty must be put to death, not by chloroform, but by slow starvation.

The stone huts of the natives are built over underground passageways, which serve as living tombs for those who pass the age of forty. These cellars are used also as places to pray in, so that from early childhood members of the sect become familiar with the spot where later they are to be condemned to die.

The execution of sentence is accompanied by solemn religious rites. The unfortunate man or woman, on his or her fortieth birthday, is conducted with lighted candles and melancholy chanting to the place of doom. Those fortunate enough to be under the fatal age then return to the upper air to celebrate the removal of the useless one, who never again sees the light of day. No guard is necessary to prevent the escape of the condemned, for it is a sincere religious belief ingrained by centuries of practice that this procedure is necessary to attain salvation in the after life. Once the ceremony has been performed and the condemned one escorted underground, he or she is dead as far as the rest of the group is concerned.

There is a second ceremony when the condemned one actually dies. This takes weeks, sometimes months, for the unfortunate is permitted, from time to time, scanty food supplies. A priest of the sect visits the condemned once each week. When actual death has occurred the body is removed from the cellar. With much wailing and lamentation, it is prepared for burial, which takes place in the same underground crypt where the discarded one was originally taken.

Very little is known, almost nothing at all has been written, about these people. The Ural Mountains, a system which extends from the Arctic Ocean southward to the Caspian Sea, separate Europe from Asia. The races of the Urals are practically all [illegible] of Russian and Asiatic stock. The "Undergrounds" are believed to be descended from the people who in the latter half of the sixteenth century, occupied Uralsk, a province of Asiatic Russia lying north of the Caspian Sea. These settlers, runaway Russian serfs and free Cossacks who did not recognize the authority of Moscow, mingled with the Nogai invaders, a remnant of the Mongol golden horde, and became a new race. In thought they combined the gloomy, melancholy, fatalistic viewpoint of the Russian and the mysticism of the Asiatic, and from this has been evolved their strange belief that death must come to all at forty.

They live under the same conditions—a frugal, healthful open-air life in the mountains—as do the centenarians of the Himalayas discovered by the English explorer, Miss Cossley-Batt. But a difference in mental attitude, a heritage of untraceable mental traits, leaves them uninterested in the prospect of prolonging life, and, on the contrary, leads them to court death at forty.

The hale and hearty old folk of the Atlantic island, Tristan da Cunha, likewise invite an interesting study of the effect of racial heritage and environment on a people's chances for long and healthy life. Not only do they defy dentists and dietitians by attaining great age, perfect teeth and sound bodies despite the fact that they break all the rules, they also upset the theories of eugenists who claim that interbreeding produces poor physical specimens.

There are but seven family names on Tristan—and all the 156 inhabitants belong to those seven families, mostly of Scotch, English and American extraction. For over a hundred and fifteen years they have intermarried, and the result is the present group of 156 perfect specimens, free of disease, sound of body and retaining their perfect teeth, without decay, until a great old age. One of the dental marvels, Samuel Swain, at seventy-five has all his thirty-two teeth, none with a sign of a cavity. Of the 156 islanders, 131 were found to have absolutely perfect teeth.

The isolation of the islands is such that the islanders didn't know until 1920 that there had been a World War—two years after it was over. No ship had been around to the island to tell them about it, and they had no radio facilities. Many have never seen money, for they do not need it on Tristan. They live a perfect communal life, and all trading is by barter and exchange. The farthest flung of all Great Britain's outposts, it lies a dreary, desolate, forlorn locality that before the arrival of a recent ship was without a single calendar, without a single watch, without a single bank note.

But lacking all these things, it has perfect health and perfect teeth—and no taxes. It is without liquor—for the island is incapable of producing grain or fruit. The diet of the islanders consists of potatoes and fish, milk and eggs. They live in a health-giving climate that has no peer on all the earth's surface. The thermometer—if they have one—drops no lower than 55 in Winter and climbs no higher than 70 in Summer, which is December to March, for Tristan is far south of the Equator.

Twice a week all the men of the community climb a 7,000-foot mountain to get kindling wood—Samuel Swain, aged seventy-five, among them. They live a life of enforced frugality, enforced simplicity, and enforced temperance.

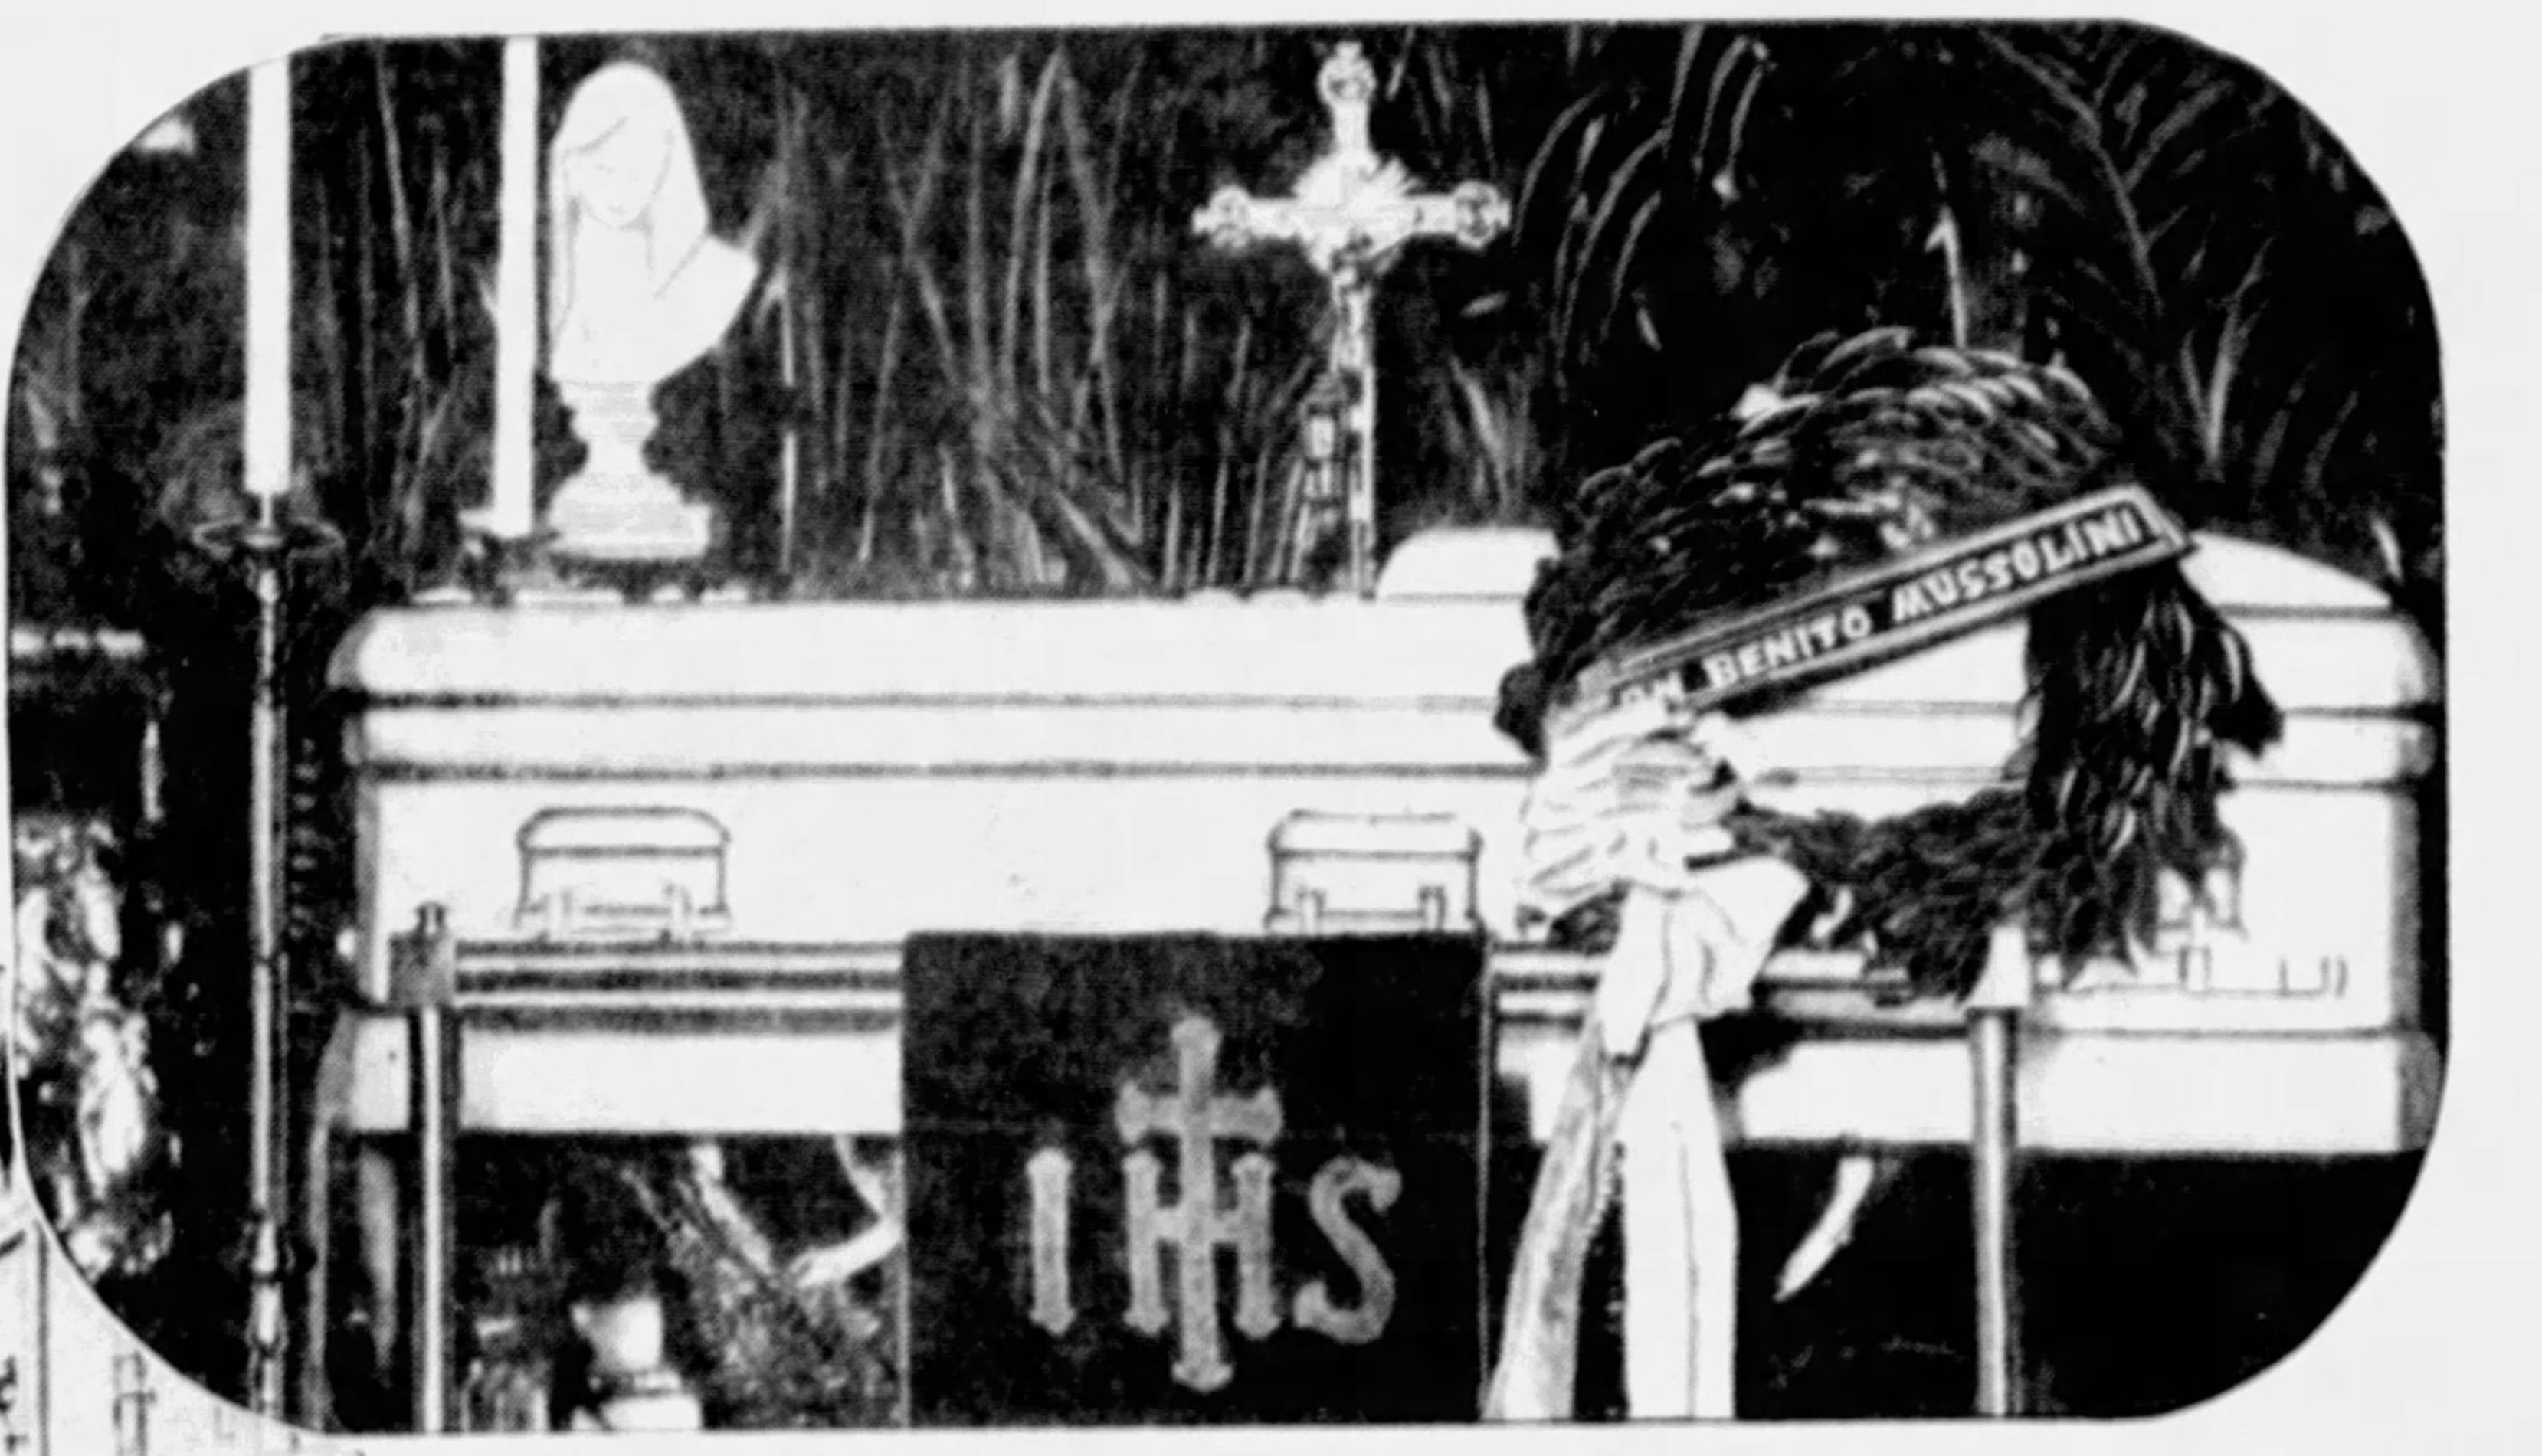
Why Rudolph Valentino's Body is Not "At Rest"

Moved From One Borrowed Tomb to Another, the Screen Star's Remains Are Worshiped by Half-Mad Admirers and His Estate Has Melted Away to Perhaps Less Than Nothing



The Casket Containing the Mortal Remains of the Great Screen Hero, as It Appeared Before It Was Closed Forever and Sealed Behind a Marble Slab in the Temporary Crypt in the Hollywood Mausoleum. The Wreath Sent by Mussolini Is Shown Resting on the Casket.

ASPIRATION

While Valentino's Estate Has Shrunk to Nothing and He Owns No Grave, Yet This Monument Stands as a Memorial in a Hollywood Park.

"Falcon Lair," the Home Valentino Built for Himself on the Side of a Mountain Back of Hollywood.

SIX years ago last August, Rudolph Valentino, the "movie" star, died from ulcers of the stomach while on a visit to New York. His body was taken by special train across the country to be placed in a crypt of the mausoleum in Hollywood Cemetery. Thousands gathered at railway stations while the funeral train was en route to pay a last homage to the celebrated actor. The legend, "Gone, but not forgotten," was printed in newspapers all over the world and in most every known language.

But no "At Rest" ever has been inscribed upon his burial place and possibly may never be. To this day, women visit his sepulchre to cry out, "Rudy, Rudy!" and to fall on their knees and weep before his niche. Some kiss the cold marble slab with which his borrowed crypt is sealed and some bring flowers and potted plants to set before the place in which his body lies.

And while admirers worship at his borrowed tomb, a battle still is being fought over disposition of his estate. When Valentino died his real estate holdings, automobiles, yacht, stocks and bonds were roughly estimated to be worth $1,000,000. This has shrunk to $130,000 and against this $139,500 of claims have been filed.

There has been no rest for the name of Valentino since his body was borne to the beautiful mausoleum in Hollywood. Strange events have transpired and odd situations have been encountered. The great actor had made no preparations for death when he went to New York in 1926, and when his mortal remains were brought back there was no place to lay them until June Mathis, the scenarist who wrote the adaptation for his "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," granted use of the crypt she had reserved for herself.

"You may sleep here, Rudy," she said, "until I die."

Less than a year elapsed before she, too, suddenly became ill in New York and died. Then Valentino's body was taken from her crypt and deposited in the one reserved for her husband, Sylvano Balboni, who now is in Italy.

There it lies today—in its second borrowed tomb. There are no funds with which to erect a private mausoleum as once was planned and contributions from the actor's former admirers throughout the world have ceased coming. One statue in bronze depicting a man with face upturned and titled "Aspiration" was unveiled in Hollywood about two years ago. Upon its base is inscribed:

"Erected in the memory of Rudolph Valentino, 1895-1926. Presented by friends and admirers in all walks of life and from all parts of the world, in appreciation of the happiness brought to them by his cinema portrayals."

There the efforts for a memorial apparently ended while complications over the estate grew.

"Falcon Lair," the handsome residence built by Valentino on the side of a mountain, has been reported haunted and is unoccupied today save for the presence of a caretaker. It cost in excess of $100,000.

The hillside bungalow in Hollywood's Whitley Heights, where Valentino spent his honeymoon days with Natacha Rambova, repeatedly has been offered for sale but has not yet been disposed of. Today it is a rented property.

Claim after claim has bobbed up from unexpected sources and been ordered paid by the court. A London tailor was allowed $2,059.77 for dress coats, dinner jackets and other apparel which Valentino in the flush of life had so lavishly ordered. A haberdasher in the same city was allowed $1,120.13 for shirts, collars, handkerchiefs and under-garments. Sedrico Beltram-Masses was awarded $2,500 due on the purchase of a painting, "Gaditana." Michael Califand was allowed $10,000 for painting a portrait of Valentino and a dealer of New York and London was allowed a balance of $2,000 on accounts for purchases of antiques including paintings and Italian and Spanish swords. United Studios was allowed $21,380 on one note and Pola Negri $15,000 on another. Bit by bit, the estate was whittled away.

The Valentino funeral in New York, where thousands stood in the rain to view the cortege, was worked up for advertising purposes, Executor Ullman said, to center interest on the sale of things in the estate.

"I got 1,500 policemen and forty press agents to handle the funeral and publicize it," he added. "I borrowed $18,000 from Joseph M. Schenck to pay for it all. I was employed as his business manager at the time and he was always in debt."

Ullman recently retired as executor of the estate and management was turned over to the trust department of a bank which is trying to salvage something from the tangled web. Alberto Guglielmi and Maria Guglielmi, brother and sister of the dead picture star, came from Italy to look after distribution of the property and have waited six years for a settlement. They do not know yet when it will come nor whether they will ever receive a dollar.

Adventuring women still pursue the wraith of the great screen lover beyond the grave. Their pilgrimages to his crypt have developed some strange little dramas before it. They cannot forget the dark eyes and Greek-god features of the star who stirred up thoughts of romance in their hearts. To Frank Heron, manager of the Cemetery Association, they tell how "Rudy" still comes to them in their dreams and delivers messages. Some of their stories are strange, indeed. One visitor said she had quarreled with her husband and during the course of the debate had tilted her chin upward and remarked that "Rudy wouldn't have treated me this way!"

"Whereupon," says Mr. Heron, "her spouse told her she'd better go live with 'Rudy,' or words to that affect, well knowing that 'Rudy' was dead.

"And that's exactly what she tried to do," he continued. "She made her way to California, sought out the mausoleum and was on the floor crying before Valentino's tomb and calling out his name when our attendants found her. Her bitter tears and her 'telling it to "Rudy"' seemed to soothe her soul."

"One of the strangest incidents happened about a year after Valentino's body was laid away," Mr. Heron said. "A young woman arrived to kneel and pray before the crypt. She seemed unutterably sad and deeply grieving. Valentino, it appeared, had meant much to her life. After a while she confided:

"'I'd like to have a cot placed before his crypt. You see, "Rudy" is the father of my unborn baby and I want to be near him when it arrives. Can this be arranged?'

"We gently led her away," Mr. Heron added. "Valentino had been dead for more than a year and could not have been a parent of her child. But she was firmly obsessed with the idea that he was and she wanted him near. We never saw or heard from her after she left."

Flowers and potted plants placed before the Valentino crypt still have to be closely guarded to prevent souvenir hunters from carrying them away. Visitors ask for leaves, blossoms and even petals from roses to cherish as having come from Valentino's tomb. A woman came one day with a cluster of flowers and asked for a receptacle in which to place them. Next day she was back with another cluster to replace those which she previously had brought. Then she walked away with all the first lot and could truthfully say they were roses from Rudolph Valentino's tomb. No one endeavored to stop her, because the flowers really were her own.

Another young woman came from Chicago, Mr. Heron continued, and asked for a single rose to take home. She explained that the previous year a young man had visited the Valentino crypt and carried away a flower, the petals of which he had distributed among "the girls in the office." Each had prized the little memento so that she wanted another to take back and distribute likewise. She was given some flowers and went away happy, holding them as precious souvenirs.

Some time ago the report spread that vandals were chipping pieces of marble from the Valentino crypt as well as from a pedestal supporting a statuette of Aphrodite which stood before it. A hurried investigation by employes failed to disclose any indication of this chipping, but a few days later the pedestal and statuette crashed mysteriously to the floor and broke into pieces.

Down the individual corridor in which Valentino's body is placed there are no vacant crypts. Yet applications have come from women in all parts of the world to be laid away at their death near the body of their beloved actor. They offer any price. One mother, a Mrs. Coppola, who had named her baby Rodolfo Valentino Coppola and watched it die at birth, did manage to get a crypt in an upper tier and she still goes regularly to the place to read from the Scriptures and deposit flowers and ferns in two receptacles. One is inscribed simply, "Baby—R. V. C., September [illegible]," and the other "Rodolfo Guglielmi Valentino, 1895-1926." Each gets an equal share of her offerings.

For a long time a mysterious woman in black made daily visits to the crypt, always to kneel and pray and kiss the marble slab. She never told her name nor where she came from. Each morning at the same hour she appeared, paid her homage silently and went away. She kept this up for nearly two years, then disappeared. And the attendants wondered. Had she played a part in Valentino's life? Was he something more to her than just a name?

A second mystery woman, the manager says, attracted attention by her insistent custom of remaining for hours before the worshiped crypt. One night at closing time she respectfully was told that she must go because the doors to the building were being locked. Ten minutes later she found a partly open window and crawled inside, apparently determined to spend the night on the marble floor. A janitor found her there and again she was asked to leave. She wanted to spend a night among the dead and be near the crypt of Valentino, she begged.

For some reason or other, spiritualists have taken a great interest in Valentino's burying place. Repeatedly they have asked permission to hold seances in the mausoleum, but their requests have been denied. The quiet of the place must not be disturbed.

However, it was disturbed once and in a most unexpected manner. A woman announced her desire to communicate with the spirit of Valentino, alone. Certainly there could be no objection to this, an attendant told her, and gave her permission to proceed. She took a position directly in front of the crypt and went into her "trance" or whatever it is that lady spiritualists enter when preparing to commune with departed souls. She stood there for a long, long time, her eyes closed, either lost in thought or endeavoring to establish a connection with the astral world. Attendants passed and repassed, paying scant attention. The afternoon was well along when a happy little cry of exultation came from the woman standing before the crypt.

"He knocks!" she exclaimed. "Listen! 'Rudy' knocks!"

Peterson, the janitor, went to her side. Sure enough, there was a rat-tat-tat from a point which seemed just at the top of the Valentino niche—a rat-tat-tat plainly audible and being repeated at intervals.

"Who's knocking?" Peterson asked.

"'Rudy's' spirit," she replied. "Can't you hear it? Why, it's plain—very plain."

The janitor did not get excited. He turned and called Johnny Franklin and George Lygus, fellow workmen.

"Better get up into the attic," he said, "and remove that noise. I heard its wings slapping against one of those latticed air-vents. Shoo it out!"

A moment later the two men were scurrying from one end of the attic to another and striking at something with their hats. Presently there was a faint "plunk" as of something falling and then they descended with a captured bird in their possession.

At the time of Valentino's death a fund was started to build an impressive memorial tomb, but it is said that there is now little or nothing in this fund. There may possibly be enough left in the estate eventually to provide a modest burial place. But even this is uncertain, and thus the ultimate spot, where the words "At Rest" may be inscribed over the screen star's mortal remains, no one knows.

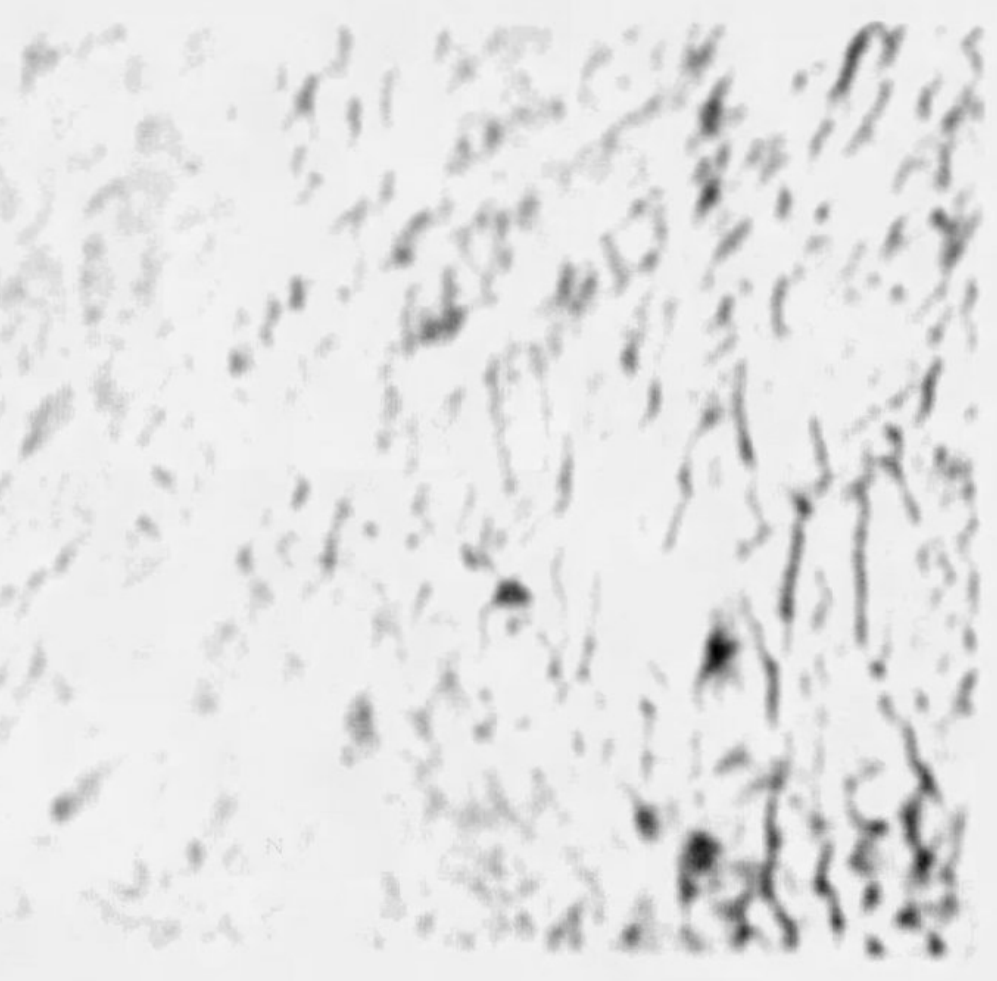
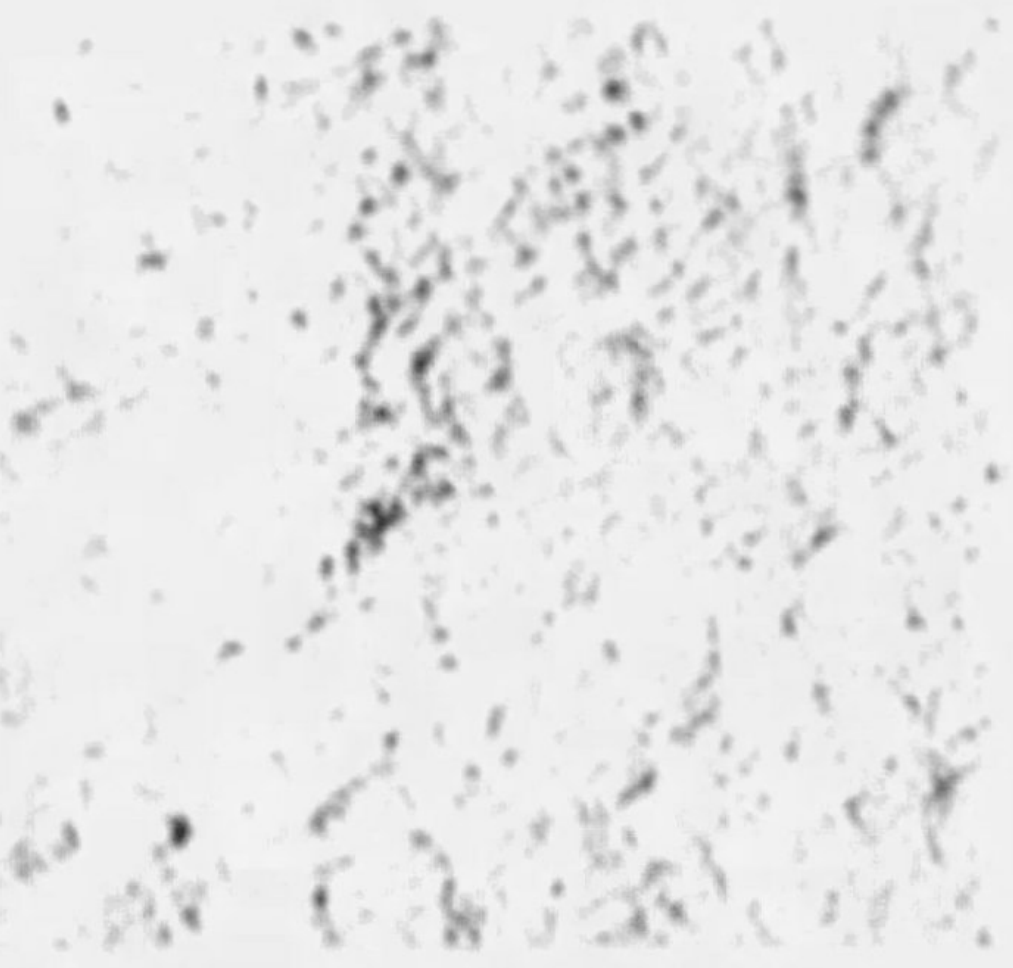
A Brief Story of What Science Learns When Face-Powders Meet the Microscope



No. 1: What coarse starchy powder does magnified



No. 2: What a heavy, thick powder does magnified

No. 3: But, even magnified, famed Djer-Kiss is marvelously smooth, fine and even!

Do you realize at all what a tremendous difference face powder can make in your appearance? In your apparent age? Here are three plain, unretouched photomicrographs of the flawless skin of a lovely girl. Her picture is shown above. In each case she used a different powder, of wide general popularity. No. 1 shows her skin under a coarse, starchy powder—the kind which is so apt to become pasty and clog pores. No. 2 shows her skin, made to look blotchy and unpleasant by a heavy, thick powder. No. 3 shows her skin with Djer-Kiss, aristocrat of the real French powders. See its beautiful smoothness, even under this magnification. Note the super-fine texture, smoothness and evenness.

> "Powder-Face Spoils Loveliness for more women than any one other evil of which I know. By 'powder-face' I mean: first, the rough, coarse look of inferior powders (which make the skin itself rough, in time), and, second, powders which are a little off color and so clash with even the most carefully chosen rouge or lipstick."

> —A Nationally Known Woman's Editor.

A further and still more searching test has been made. Ten popular powders were purchased, and put under still more powerful lenses,—which magnify 470 times!—and photographed.

These ten photomicrographs almost make you jump. Some of the powders look like piles of salt. Every one was coarser and far less smooth than Djer-Kiss.

Would you like to see these 470-magnification pictures, as the camera saw them? If you will mail the coupon, we'll send them, space to reproduce them here is lacking.

No matter how much you pay for a powder, you can buy none made of costlier, purer materials than Djer-Kiss. It contains absolutely nothing that will become pasty and clog pores, nothing that can irritate the most sensitive skin.

Its famed clinging-power comes from fineness. Every particle of Djer-Kiss must be so fine that it will float on air.

Another important advantage is the color-trueness and clearness of Djer-Kiss tints. This eliminates those unhappy clashes between face-powder and rouge, or lipstick.

Millions of America's loveliest women and prettiest girls know this. Their complexions show it.

Go to your favorite store today. Get Djer-Kiss—even if you still have powder left. There are four charmingly smart tints; two generous sizes of package—60c and $1.

See for yourself the difference it makes. All trace of the horrid "powder-face" look is banished for good! Glory in the soft, fresh loveliness it gives.

THIS LAST, GREAT STEP TO FRESH COLOR-LOVELINESS

drops 5 to 10 years from women's faces

Every beauty authority and woman's editor who sees this discovery, proclaims it the greatest beauty-development ever made!

It enables any woman past twenty-five to erase five to ten years of seeming age from her face. Instantly!

Face Powder holds the secret not rouge, lipstick, or natural coloring. Is that incredible? Wait . . .

You know that no color is the same in daylight as it is at dusk, or under any artificial light. How many times you've found that out, while shopping!

Any woman who uses, after the sun goes down, the same face-powder that she uses in full daylight, cannot help looking years older than she ought! The moment the sun goes down, all colors change—to the human eye.

Because something goes out of the light. And no artificial light man has made can put it back. You must use, therefore, a face powder that compensates, or makes up, for this change. And now, after years of scientific study and experimentation with light and color, Djer-Kiss has provided this: the first compensating, color-correct powders . . one for daylight, one for after daylight, in one package. And in scientifically correct tints for every complexion, from the fairest to the most darkly exotic!

Advice on this problem has always been vague, up to now. "Use a richer make-up" they have told us, or "use more color." But if you do either of those things you make a bad matter worse. That is why millions of women today look years older than they should.

Let any woman compare her looks, her apparent age . first with her accustomed beauty-aids. And Then with her own correct, compensating tint of the new Djer-Kiss Day and Night—Jour-et-Nuit (say: "Zhoor-ay-nwee").

Years drop away instantly, breath-takingly! From five to ten years if you're past twenty-five. And even in the case of radiant Eighteen, the change is startling.

You have never seen anything like it. Not even if you have paid $5—and had your face-powder specially, expertly blended. It seems unbelievable . . . until you try.

Day-and-night Djer-Kiss—Jour-et-Nuit—will be found at all good stores. It has all the exquisite, traditional Djer-Kiss quality . all the strangely lasting daintiness.

The Jour-et-Nuit box is $1. Both correct colors, one for daylight, one for night, in one box.

Here is fresh and alluring loveliness for all your waking hours—your first duty to yourself and to those you love.

The "Garden of Eden" Under the Pacific Ocean?

An English Scholar's Evidence That the Cradle of Mankind Was the "Lost Continent of Mu," Which Sank Beneath the Sea 13,000 Years Ago With Its 64,000,000 Inhabitants, and From Which Came the Civilization of Egypt and All Others

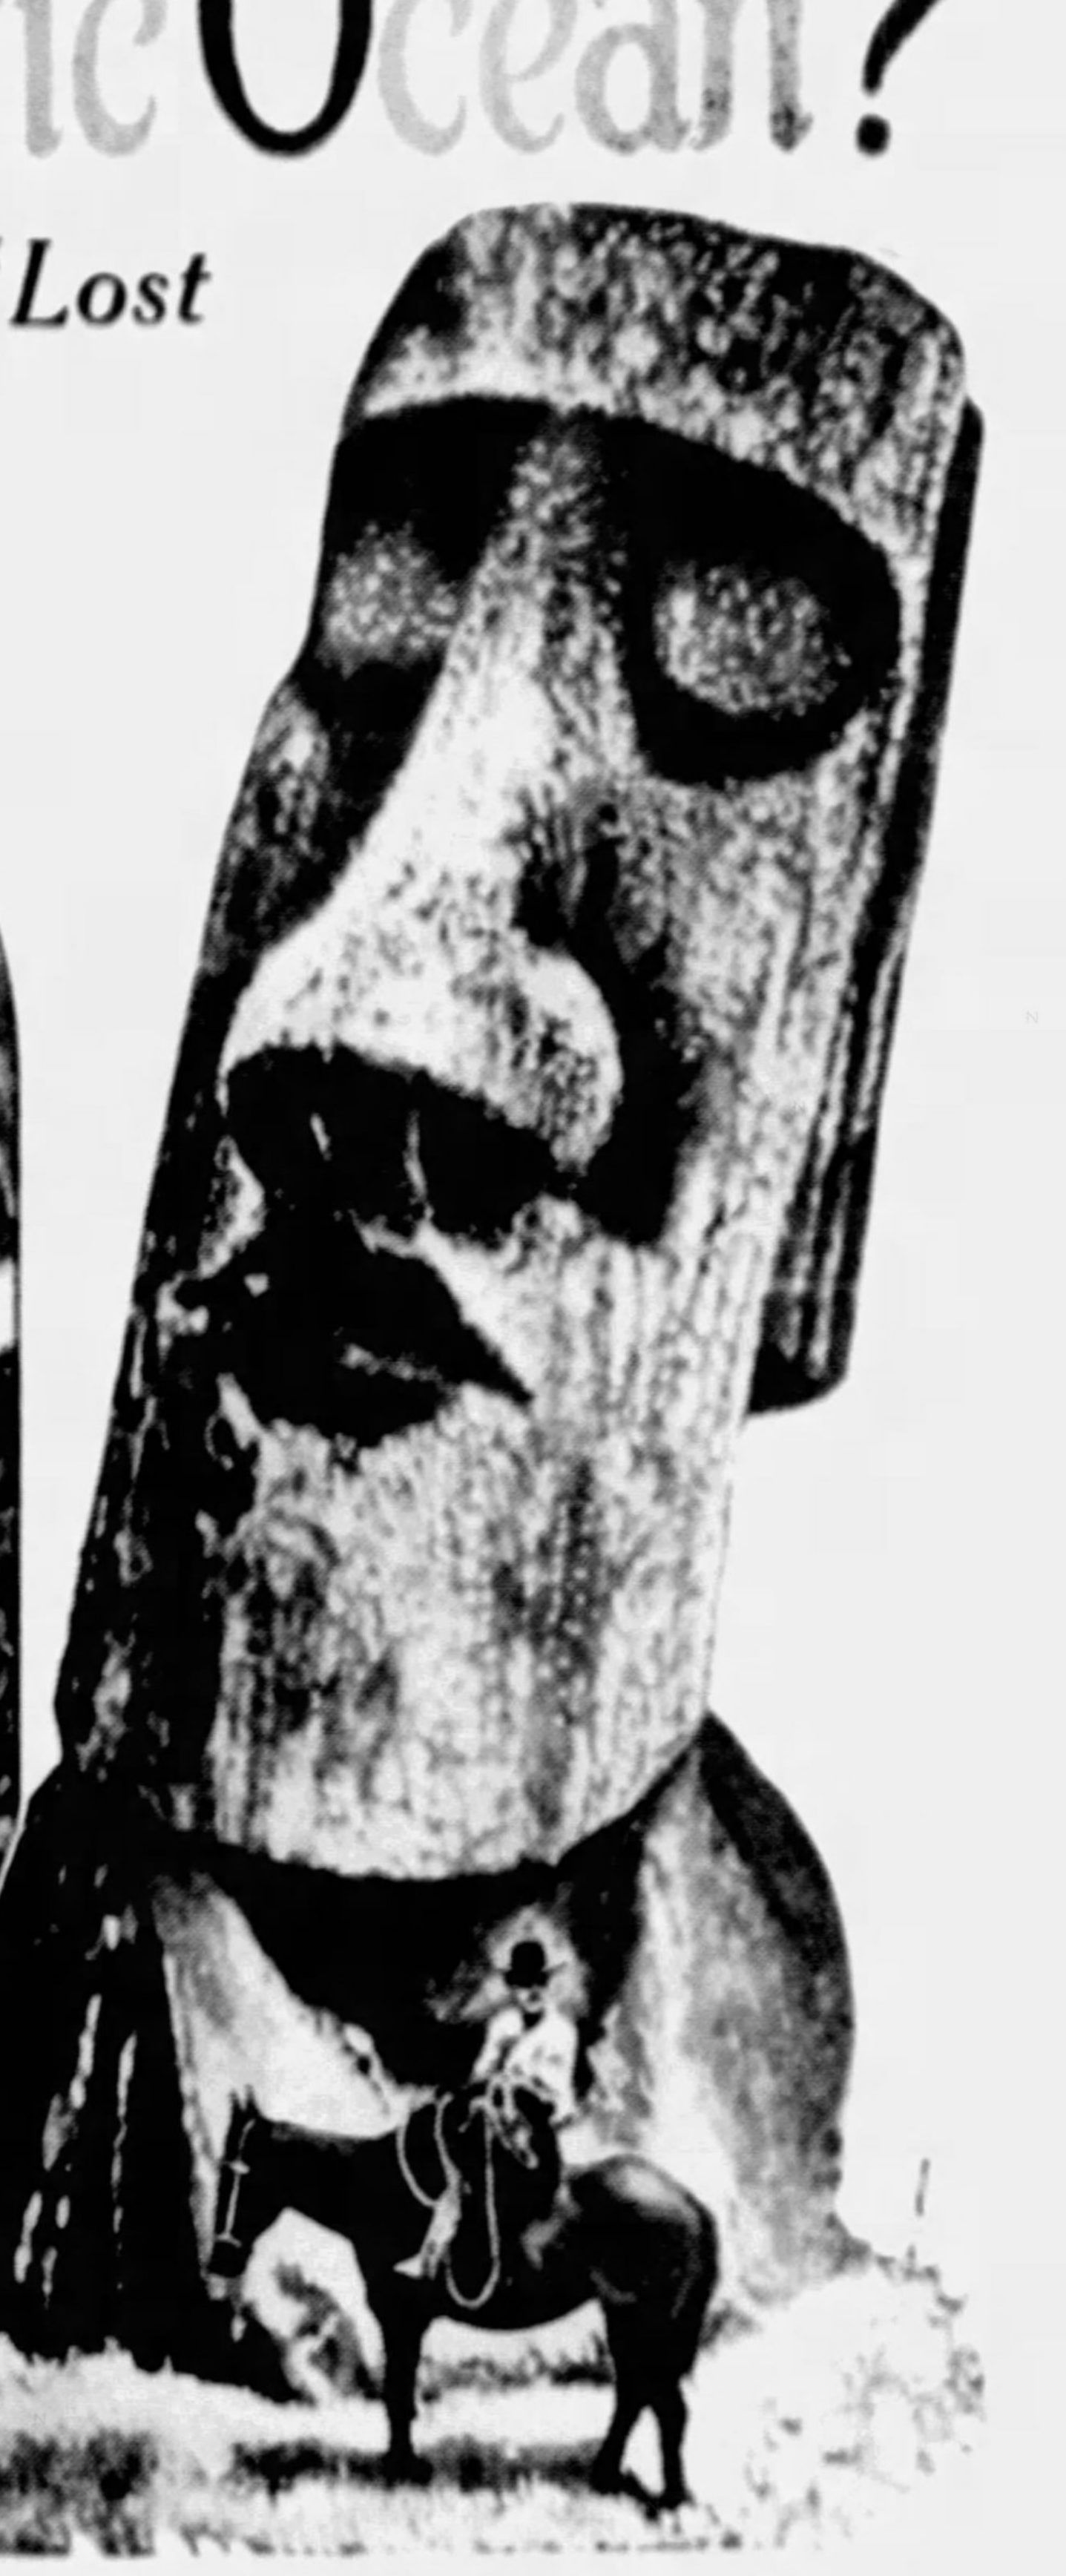
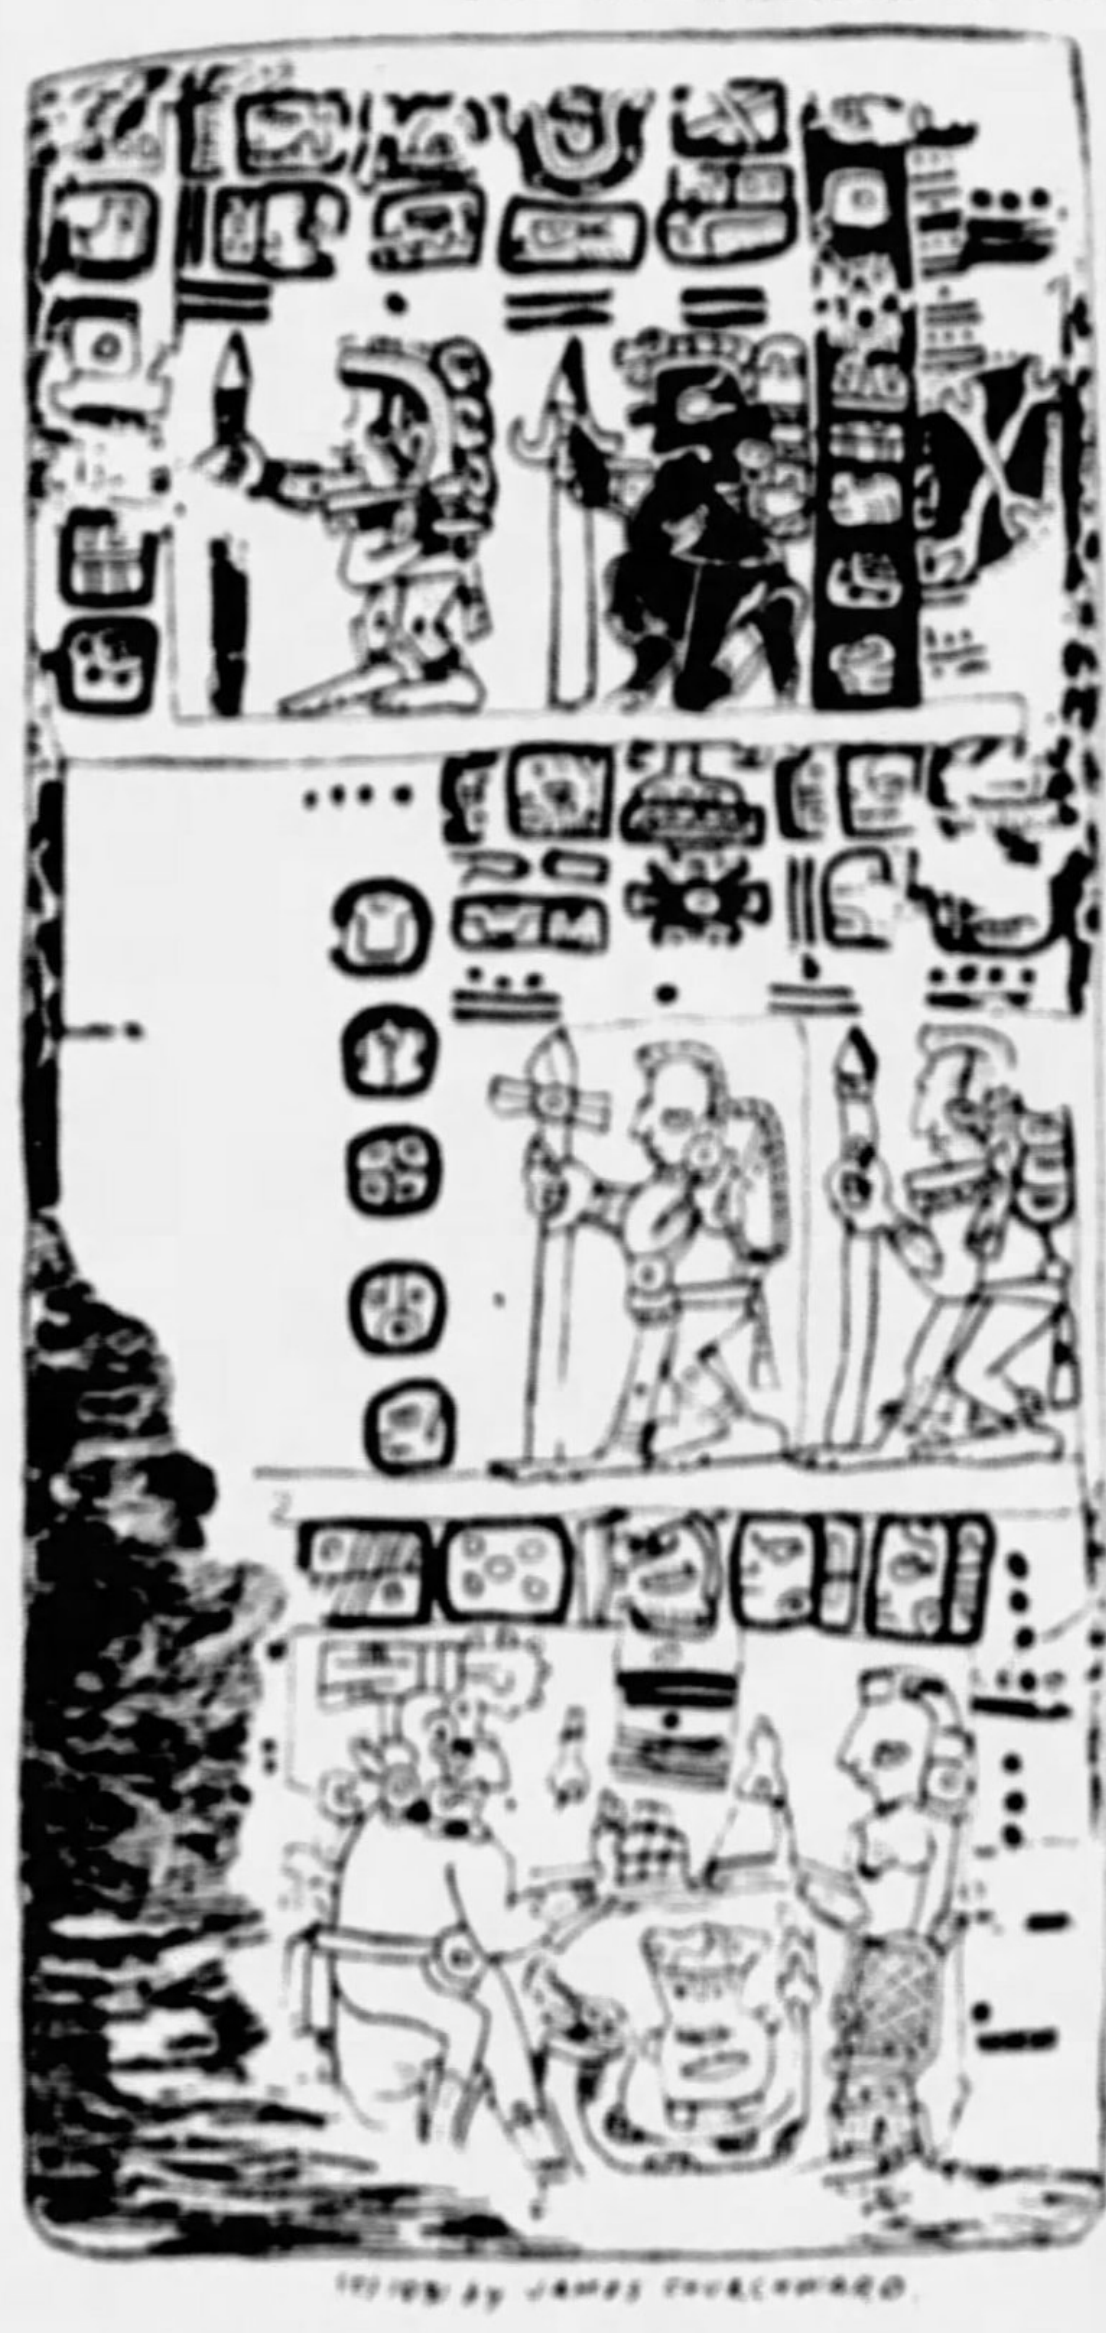
The Destruction of the Motherland of Mu by Earthquake and Cataclysmic Waves. From a Drawing by Colonel James Churchward in His Book, "The Lost Continent of Mu." Copyright by James Churchward.



One of the Gigantic Ancient Stone Statues on Mysterious Easter Island Which May Have Been Carved When It Was a Part of the Mainland of Mu.

THE Garden of Eden was not in Asia, but on a now sunken continent in the Pacific Ocean. The Biblical story of Creation, the epic of the seven days from chaos to man, did not come first from the Euphrates Valley or the Nile, but from this submerged continent which was called Mu, and was the Motherland of man. Civilization did not originate in Egypt about 6,000 years B. C., as some scientists believe. It originated on Mu more than 200,000 years ago and spread from there all over the earth. Mu was sunk with 64,000,000 people about 13,000 years ago. It was destroyed by volcanic forces and tidal waves.

The civilization of Mu flourished before either the Andes or Himalayas existed, and when South America had an inland sea comparable to the Mediterranean. This sea is now the upper basin of the Amazon River and its tributaries. The mysterious canals about Lake Titicaca in the Andes were made by colonists from Mu, and at that time the region, which is now at an elevation of 12,500 feet, was at sea-level. So was the plateau of Mexico on which is Mexico City, which is now 7,000 feet high. The South American Incas and the Central American Mayas of prehistoric times were the dying embers of the earlier civilization. Colonists from Mu were the forefathers of the Greeks and probably of the Scandinavians.



Drawn by James Churchward

A Page of the Troana Manuscript, an Ancient Mayan Book From Yucatan, Which Colonel Churchward Claims to Have Translated and Which He Says Contains the Story of the Destruction of Mu.

Atlantis, the legendary island continent which is supposed to have lain between America and Europe, was settled by other colonists from Mu, and some hundreds of years after the sinking of the Motherland in the Pacific it was destroyed in identically the same manner and through the same causes.

These and many other interesting assertions which, if true, explain a number of historic mysteries, are made by Colonel James Churchward in two books, "The Lost Continent of Mu," and "The Children of Mu," recently published by Ives Washburn, New York. Extraordinary as his statements are, they are being seriously considered by scientists in America and abroad who are studying his evidence.

Colonel Churchward is an English scholar. He says that in 1875 he was sent to Central India to assist in famine relief. Here he met a high priest in a temple school monastery. They became fast friends and the priest showed him some extremely ancient tablets which had been hidden "for thousands of years" in the temple vaults. They were written in "Naacal," which the priest told him was the original language of the world. The priest taught Churchward this language, and together the two deciphered the tablets. They narrated the story of creation and designated "the lost land of Mu" as the birthplace of man.

This friendship continued for twelve years, by which time Churchward had mastered the Naacal, and had sufficient knowledge of the civilization described on the tablets to search for further evidences of it.

He went first to the Caroline Islands in the South Seas, which islands, he says, are remnants of the sunken continent. There he found rock carvings in the lost language which he claims he was able to read. Then he journeyed to Tibet and Central Asia. After this he went to Egypt and discovered in the Bulaq Museum, of Cairo, ancient records which his knowledge of the Naacal enabled him to translate and which also told of Mu. He studied prehistoric ruins and monuments in many other lands, steadily gaining further confirmation.

The Explorer's Map of the "Lost Continent of Mu," Showing Its Hypothetical Position in the Pacific Ocean Between the Americas and Asia.

Some years ago William Niven, a well-known American archeologist, discovered in Mexico the ruins of three great cities, two of which had been built successively on the ruins of the others. The top, and therefore latest, city was covered with a foot of earth, and then nine feet of boulders, gravel and sand, showing it had been destroyed by a flood.

Between this and the next city were six feet of boulders, gravel and sand indicating it had been wiped out in the same way. Then came fourteen feet of the same materials and a layer of volcanic ash. Beneath this were the ruins of the third city, which, of course, must have been built first. This had been destroyed by volcanic forces and earthquakes, and later covered by water.

In these ruins Niven unearthed some small stone tablets engraved with symbols unlike any before found in Mexico. They were so curious that he spent three years searching for more, and finally got together 2,600 of them. These are now in Tampico, Mexico, because the Mexican Government will not allow them to be taken out of the country. Colonel Churchward heard of the discovery and went to look at the tablets. He found to his astonishment that Nevin's inscribed stones were written in symbols which he was able to interpret by comparison with the Naacal. He translated them, and there again was the story of the lost Motherland. His conclusion is that the ruins among which they were found had been originally a colony of Mu.

The translation of the Niven tablet No. 51, a drawing of which is on this page, reads as follows, according to Colonel Churchward:

"By command of the great Creator, the Nameless, whose symbol is the Sun, called Ra, the Forces which emanate from His wishes and desires put the fires of the underneath into action, for the purpose of using their powers and force to raise the bed of the ocean until it appeared above the waters for man, who was to be created, to live upon. The land was raised and man was created upon it, and the name thereof is the Land of Mu."

The symbols, which are phrases or words, have been segregated from the inscription, and are shown in a line beneath the main drawing.

The land of Mu, he says, was an island continent measuring 5,000 miles from east to west and about 3,000 from north to south. Narrow channels or seas cut it into three portions. It extended from the north of what is now Hawaii, with a line between the present Easter Island and the Fijis as its southern boundary. Easter Island, whose gigantic statues are one of the greatest mysteries of archeology, was then a part of the mainland of Mu. The statues are relics of its civilization, according to the new theory.

The Easter Island natives have a legend that runs: "This place was once a part of a great continent of land, crossed with many roads, beautifully paved with flat stones. The roads were cunningly constructed to represent the plan of the web of the grey and black pointed spider, and no man could discover the beginning or the end thereof."

Easter Island is a tiny spot, only thirteen miles in length. Its greatest width is seven miles. One of the mysterious statues with which it is dotted is seventy feet high. There are also several platforms of enormous cut and dressed stones. These seem to have been awaiting shipment somewhere when occurred whatever catastrophe it was that put an end to Easter Island's statue-making. Many scientists believe that the island must have been much larger in the long ago, and that what remains of it was actually an immense quarry where monuments and dressed stones were cut to be removed to other parts now beneath the ocean.

The explanation of Mu's submersion which Colonel Churchward furnishes, based on years of oceanographic study, is that the primary rock foundations on which Mu rested were undermined by a series of cavities filled with highly explosive gas. This gas at last found volcanic vent, and as a result the caverns were shattered, their roofs fell and with them collapsed the land they upheld. It is, of course, well-known that the whole territory taken in by Colonel Churchward's hypothetical map of Mu is volcanic.

Although the cradle of humanity was wiped out, except a few fragments now constituting island groups of the South Pacific, the world was not thereby deprived of its population, because colonization from Mu had been going on for untold ages. Colonel Churchward says the colonizers "were generally called Mayas," and carried with them the culture of the Mother country. Maya is also the name of the highly civilized race which preceded the Aztecs in Mexico.

The migrations took two main directions, one to the east and the other westward. The main easterly line, he says, left behind a plain trail in the form of many records. One of these, which the writer claims to have deciphered, is set out in what is known as the Troana Manuscript. This is one of a half-dozen or so books of the Mayans which survived the wholesale destruction of the Mayan libraries by the religious fanatics who accompanied the Spaniards during their conquest of Mexico. It is now in the British Museum. Colonel Churchward asserts that it "speaks of Mu, using the same symbols for it that one finds in India, Burma and Egypt."

According to Colonel Churchward's translation, the page from the Troana manuscript reproduced on this page reads:

"In the year 6 Kan, on the 11 Muluc, in the month of Zac, there occurred earthquakes until the 13 Chuen without interruption. The country of the hills of earth—the land of Mu—was sacrificed. Twice unheaved, it disappeared during the night, having been constantly shaken by the fires of the underneath. Being confined, these caused the land to rise and to sink several times in various places. At last the surface gave way and the ten countries (or tribes) were torn asunder and scattered. They sank with their 64,000,000 inhabitants 8060 years before the writing of this book."

Egypt was colonized by Mayas, coming from Atlantis under the leadership of Thoth, about 16,000 years ago, Colonel Churchward thinks. Thoth was later defined by the Egyptians as the god of wisdom.

The Troana manuscript, according to Colonel Churchward, also contains this:

"Fleeing from the wrath of her brother Aac, Queen Moo [illegible] Yucatan [illegible] her course toward the rising sun at last reached a Maya settlement which had recently been established on the banks of the Nile. There she met Thoth, the founder, who became her friend and preceptor in religious matters."

Herodotus, the old Greek called the "Father of History," says: "The Egyptians boasted that their ancestors in the lands of the West were the oldest men on earth."

Diodorus Siculus, a Greek historian of the 1st Century B. C., writes, "The Egyptians themselves claimed that their ancestors were strangers who in very remote times settled on the bank of the Nile, bringing with themselves the civilization of their Mother country, the art of writing and a polished language. They had come from the direction of the Setting Sun and that they were the most ancient of men."

Colonel Churchward believes that his evidence shows "the first Egyptians were Mayas, the first settlers in lower Egypt came from Atlantis, the first settlers in Upper Egypt came from India, subsequently both colonies were augmented by colonies from the Motherland, that the inhabitants of Mu were the first men on earth; that Atlantis was destroyed by earthquake and submerged; that America was destroyed and made impassable and uninhabitable for a long time by cataclysms; that in Egypt Mu the Motherland was also called the Lands of the West and [illegible] land; that Egypt was once a colony of Mu, and after Mu went down became an Empire."

The lost continent is described by the writer, from tablets and ancient documents, as a tropical country, immensely fertile, with no mountains. Roaming through the primeval forests were mastodons and other vanished forms of animal life. Broad, smooth roads ran in all directions.

Many scientists are likely to take issue with Colonel Churchward upon some of his statements and conclusions. They will probably assert that, prepossessed by an idea, he has taken many things for confirmations which are equally as susceptible to other and quite different interpretations. It is also unfortunate that there is none but himself who can read what he terms "the Naacal characters," and so provide a check upon his translation.

Nevertheless, his books reveal an enormous amount of ethnological and archeological research, and his illustrations are full of interest, irrespective of his hypothesis.

CHAPTER II.

"IT'S a strange thing that gunmen seldom 'burn' in the electric chair, and not many get shot by the police. And yet some gangster is slain almost every day or two by another gangster. They ought to learn to stop fighting among themselves," said Steve Sweeney, the leader of our "stick-up" outfit one day as he sat playing solitaire in the flat with a bottle of fine Haig and Haig Scotch whiskey, waiting for it to get dark so he would dare to go out.

"Stick-up men have got it pretty easy, but they haven't sense enough to know it. Everything is rigged in their favor. The pistol law is our best friend, next to the Parole Board," he continued.

"But the law forbidding pistols puts you away for a long time if the cop gets you with one," I said.

"That doesn't happen often, and it is nothing compared with the big advantage to us in our business. Old Tim Sullivan, who was a friend of many crooks, sure did us a service when he put that law over. There ought to be a monument set up for him in Central Park.

"The pistol law makes it safe and sure for the stick-up man. When we go into a place it is almost a certainty that no honest man in the speakie, or in his own home, has got a gun. The Sullivan law strips most everybody but the crook of any means of defense."

But the unexpected sometimes happens, and the hold-up gang may run into a police car just as it is leaving the scene of its activity or be overtaken by detectives who have commandeered a car. I remember reading of a fight between police in a 12-mile running battle through the streets of the Bronx and upper Manhattan. And when everything was over three of the hold-up men, two policemen and a child had been killed and twelve other persons, including three policemen, were wounded.

I mentioned that Sweeney was enjoying a bottle of his favorite booze—a "pinch" bottle of Haig and Haig Scotch. And this reminds me of how he happened to have it.

In our hide-out there was always plenty of liquor—and it was the very best. Whenever the gang held up a high class speakie they took time to look over the stuff on the shelves behind the bar, and each would stuff into his pockets or under his free arm, a few bottles. Some nights when we got home we would have a couple of dozen bottles of the best Scotch or other imported liquors. Of course, some of the places we raided were really not much better than dumps, and we did not bother to bring anything along in the way of drink.

One night Sweeney carried away a couple of bottles of his favorite Haig and Haig Scotch from a speakeasy and restaurant in Harlem. This was rather unusual, because Harlem liquor, as a rule, is pretty poor stuff. It was about 2 o'clock in the morning when the outfit held up this place, and, after they got home, they drank up the two bottles of Haig and Haig.

This was so good, and they were so enthusiastic about it, that they had the nerve to go right up there the next afternoon, and succeeded in getting in. They went to the bar where the day bartender was on duty, and called for a "pinch" bottle of Haig and Haig. The bartender turned to where the stuff had been the day before and seemed surprised that there were no bottles there. He apologized and remarked that the night trade had drank it all up. Of course, he knew about the hold-up in the early morning hours, but it is not customary to mention such things, because it tends to frighten customers. So our outfit took one drink of the ordinary bar liquor, decided it was pretty poor stuff, and walked out.

It may seem surprising to the reader that they had the nerve to go back to the same place they had robbed only a few hours before on that very day. But it was not such a great risk as it would seem. They knew the police had not been notified, and there would be no detectives hanging around. The night bartender, of course, would be at home and in bed, and it was extremely unlikely that any customers or waiters who had been there at 2 o'clock in the morning would be there at 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon. But still there was a chance that somebody would be around and recognize them. They asked me to go along, but it seemed to me foolish to take a chance for a few bottles of whiskey.

Margaret Murray, of the Sweeney Hold-Up Gang, That Raided More Than 500 Speakeasies in and Around New York.

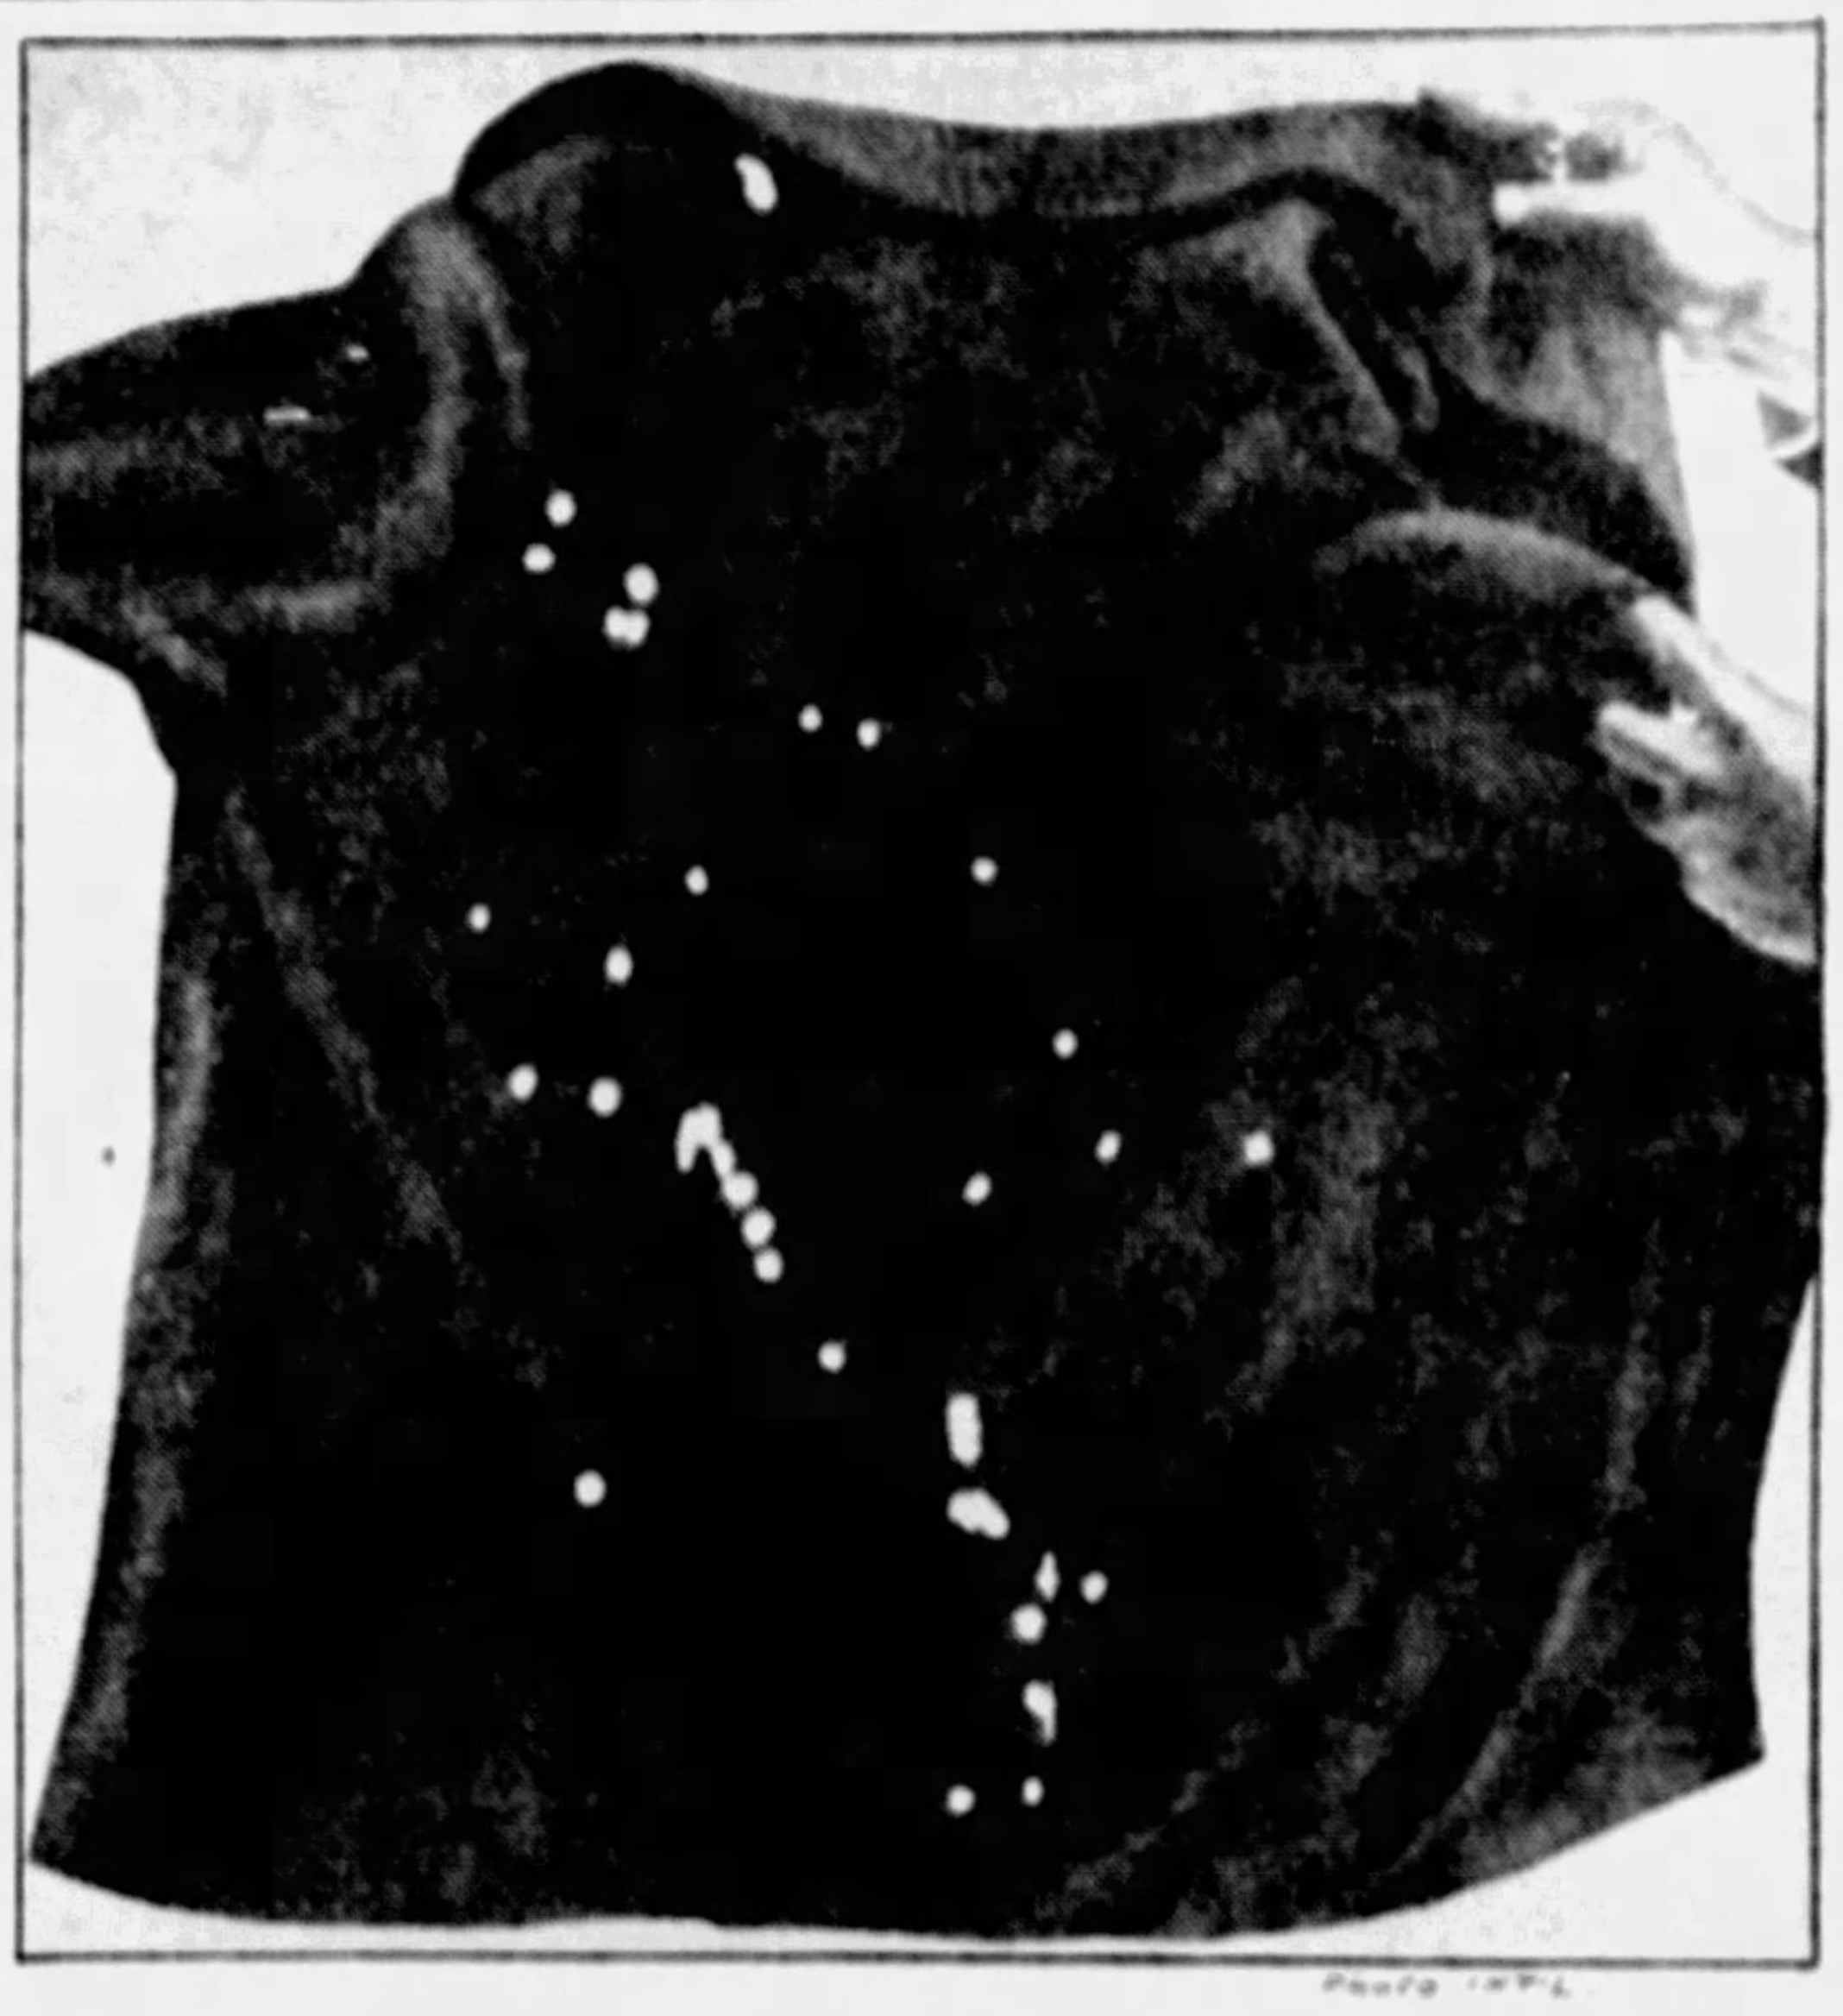
One of the important services the gunman's moll renders is to be one of the party when the outfit are scouting for "prospects" for hold-ups. It seems that the lookout at a strange speakeasy is much more likely to let in strangers if there is a girl with them. I went into lots of places in the afternoons with them when they were scouting about to size up speakies.

It is very easy to spot a speakeasy from the street. Many are the old time barrooms made over, and most of the others have earmarks which are easily read from the sidewalk by most anybody. When we were once inside the boys would look around, study the layout of the rooms, the position of the bar and general appearance of prosperity. If they decided the place was worth while raiding they would decide how they would "take it," and usually come back the same night.

On these scouting visits, if they wanted to stall around for quite a time studying things, they would order highballs, which can be sipped, and slowly made to spread over a lot of time. I did not care for hard liquors, and on these occasions I would slowly sip a glass of beer.

The reader may wonder how our outfit managed to stick up more than 500 speakeasies without being caught. And I asked Steve Sweeney how long the speakie hold-up game would last before it was exhausted.

"Well, it will last forever—unless they change the dry law," said Sweeney. "You can figure out for yourself. The newspapers say, and I guess they're right, there are 30,000 speakies in New York. Let's throw out half the number as being dumps that aren't worth bothering with, or are too well guarded to make it safe to take a chance. That leaves 15,000 speakies in the field. Now, supposing we work four nights a week and 'take' about six joints a night—call it 25 stick-ups a week, or 1,300 a year. At that rate it would take nearly twelve years to work through the entire field.



The Overcoat of Joseph Aiello After He Was Mowed Down by Machine Gun Bullets. More Than Thirty Punctures in the Coat Were Counted by the Chicago Police. Aiello Was Head of an Alleged Bootleg Organization, and Lost His Life When Other Gangsters Tried to "Chisel In" on Them.

"So, you see, we could work for twelve years without repeating on any place. And by the time we had to go over the ground again, owners, bartenders, and even the places would be mostly changed. So our game is good as long as prohibition lasts."

I am sure that of all the many new fields of crime which prohibition has opened for the criminal, ours was the safest and easiest. Yet none of us, even when drunk, had a comfortable, relaxed moment, one in which we were not afraid of our lives. Besides the possibility that every ring of the doorbell might mean the cops, who, as I have already said, were one of our lesser worries, it might be a mob of hoodlums hired by our victims, the speakeasies, to get rid of us. Banks and businesses carry theft insurance, and hotel associations have detective bureaus that run down the sharps who prey on them, but the speakies have no protection or revenge except to hire these gangs of gorillas to bump off as many stick-up men as they can. (Hoodlums and gorillas are terms never applied to members of one's own or friendly gangs.)

Thus prohibition has made murder on salary, or at so much per head, a permanent year-in-and-year-out career for a considerable number of men in all the large cities of the United States. Before prohibition there were occasional cases where a man was hired to kill another man, but the professional hired assassin, who does nothing else, was unknown in America.

Then there was a third danger. All of us were born, brought up and belonged in what is known as "Hell's Kitchen," a large and somewhat vague area on the West Side of New York, running north from the Chelsea district to San Juan Hill. As long as we did not pull anything outside of Hell's Kitchen we had only the police and the speakie gorillas to fear, but when we did a job elsewhere we invited an unwelcome call from the gangs who considered that they owned the territory we had invaded.

Such invasions are known as "chiseling in." Every gangster agrees that it should never be done, and yet all gangs do it sooner or later. It is at the bottom of most gang warfare. "Chiseling in" is one of the most dangerous things a gangster can do. The penalty is almost certain death. When his punishment comes, it comes in no uncertai way. The late Joseph Aiello, head of th powerful Aiello cla of Chicago, alcoh dealers and bootleggers, was one of th victims of a "chiseling" war. For year the Aiellos — fou brothers and ha a dozen cousins—had battled Al Capone for control o the Unione Sicilione which furnished large part of the raw alcohol that goes int Chicago's bathtu liquor. Nearly every member operated a smal still, in flats, tenements and the ramshackl houses of Little Italy.

The Aiellos allied themselves with Georg "Bugs" Moran and his North Side gang in the contest with the Capone forces. After Capon put the Moran gang out of business, it was re ported that the Aiellos had gone over to Capone Joseph, head of the family, lived only a few days afterward. He was "put on the spot" i Little Italy and when the police examined th overcoat on his body it looked like a large sieve—there were more than thirty punctures in th back made by machine-gun bullets.

We chiseled as far north as Harlem and dee into Brooklyn, but for some reason the boys neve took me with them over the river. We only stepped out of our own territory when sorel tempted by learning of some swell speakie wher there ought to be a big bundle in the cash regis ter, plenty more in the pockets of the customers and a ground-floor layout convenient for stick-up. Each time we all agreed that it wa bad business and vowed never to do it again. N harm came of these chiselings because the gang we were poaching on never knew who did it.

If we had robbed a cigar or shoe store or an other legitimate concern, there would have bee a "squawk" to the police and our descriptio printed in the papers, but the speakeasy, bein against the law, has to suffer in silence. Thoug the cops might never have pinned it on us, some body else would, and some night, as we wer starting to work, another car would have swun alongside and given us a few bursts of machine gun fire.

Probably, in time, we would have gotten ou indirectly, through the police, as "Legs" Diamon did. Some customer of a speakie we had robbe would recognize us in a theatre or on the stree and have us "collared." That would not hav been so bad. We would have gotten a goo "mouthpiece," who knows all the thousands o loopholes put in the law and kept there, yea after year, for the benefit of criminals, and n doubt we would have "beaten the rap." But ou pictures would be in the papers and recognize by every bartender we had held up. That is on thing a barkeep never forgets, the face of a ma who put a gun on him. They would not testif against us, but they would talk, and the gangster we had poached on would hear. It would be a matter of luck whether the chiseled gangsters o the hired gorillas got to us first.

I mention all this because movies and de tective stories of the underworld give the in pression that there is nothing to worry about bu a cop. That is what I thought until I got into th game and found the police were about numbe three on a long list of worries. The thing tha put Steve Sweeney in his grave and busted u the gang was still another that I had never thought of.

Sweeney enjoyed the gangster movies and laughed long and frequently at the way the films pictured a hold-up.

He often told me what had happened as they lined up the men and women, face to the wall, like a lot of naughty children and with their hands clutching for the ceiling. Sometimes they squeal in terror when they feel the gangsters' fingers frisking their pockets, sometimes their leg muscles give out, making them sit down with a thud, and sometimes other muscles give out. If there is danger of pursuit, the trousers, belts or suspenders are cut and the victims are in poor condition to run out on the street and follow the retreating hold-up men.

But the movies usually show hold-ups in big, expensive speakeasies, where there are many rooms. No hold-up outfit would be likely to take a chance on raiding these.

Another notion I would like to correct concerns the social arrangements between the sexes, what the moving picture people call the sex-interest, or, more p ely, the love interest. It is natural to suppose that a man who has no regard for any laws, and is perfectly willing to murder as many people as stand between him and freedom, would be equally careless and promiscuous in his relations with the "molls" in the gang.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The gangster has no respect for women, will beat them up, shoot them as readily as he would a man, or even torture one to death to wring a secret from her. But to flirt with another gangster's "moll" is recognized as the most fatal form of chiseling. It is seldom started, and still more rarely allowed to go far.

I was Sweeney's sweetheart, and never did any other man in our mob make the slightest advance to me. Had I made any, I am certain that it would have been met with a frightened and angry snub. Steve often went to Philadelphia for days at a time on some mysterious errands, while I was with Freddy Schoenhardt and "Handsome" Harold McCormick alone in the apartment, but I was as safe from molestation as if I had been their own sister.

Had I been the sweetheart of one of them it would have been equally safe to have left me alone all night with our leader, Steve. Those two boys were later to take Steve for a ride and give him the works, but the papers were all wrong when some intimated that there was love-jealousy in it. The gangster may, and, I guess, usually does, have another "jane" or two on the outside. I would not be much surprised to learn that Steve had a little friend in Philadelphia, but inside the circle of our mob there were no "skirt" worries.

There is no initiation or blood-curdling oath when one joins a gang. You just slip in as easily and carelessly as some day you may slip out a few hours before the "bulls" find your body after the "ride." This is how I happened to get in. Several years ago my father disappeared, leaving my mother with a large family. Some of us got jobs and kept things going for a while, but one after another we lost them, and, finally, there was my older sister, Stella; my older brother, John; a younger brother, Joe, 19, and my kid brother, Gene, only 12, all out of work.

The one person who seemed able to get and hold her job permanently was the one who ought not to have worked at all, our mother. She brought home $15 every week as a scrubwoman. We held a family council and decided that if we could not help we should at least get out, so that Mother would have only Gene to support.

At this critical moment I went to room with a girl friend. It was certainly no time for John to get married, but some people always choose the worst possible moments, and then they usually make them still worse by having a whole flock of children. For some time John had been in love with June, a girl whom we had all known for years. It was a good time for a quarrel, and they had one, after which John hunted vainly for her many days. When he found her she was working as a domestic servant and did not like it.

In their joy at reconciliation they married on the spur of the moment, properly and respectably in a church, where I was one of the witnesses. John and his bride, whom I had been as good friends with as most girls ever are, took a little flat in West Fortieth street, and I moved in with them. Steve Sweeney, with whom I was pretty well in love by this time, visited us and urged a bigger and better apartment. Steve had money, and, as usual, we who hadn't any listened.

He picked a six-room one on Eighty-fourth street, and moved into the first bedroom with his brother, Milford, whom everyone called Micky. I took the second, and John and his bride the third. Now that we were both under one roof, June and I did not like each other so well, and one night had a real quarrel. John, of course, had to side with his wife, but Steve took my part. After he had gone John and June moved out. At about 3:30 a. m. Steve came home to find me up waiting for him. As soon as he had learned that they had left he asked what I was going to do. I said:

"I'll stick and I'll be your little 'Bright Eyes' (the lookout for the gang)."

"Do you really mean it, Margaret?" he asked, and I answered:

"Sure; if you want me?"

"Okay, Kid," was his reply. "'Nuff said." And with those few words I became a member in full standing of Steve Sweeney's gang, or mob, as we called it. But as I have already mentioned in the first chapter, he had been trying to get me to do this very thing by having me sit outside in the car during holdups when I did not know what was going on. Afterward he would toss a $50 bill into my lap, saying it was my reward for sitting there and looking dumb. I didn't want to be a crook, a gangster's "moll," but it looked so safe and easy, and I loved Steve. So when the time came to decide, I said yes.

It is my opinion that most women slip into the world of crime rather against their wishes, as I did, to follow their man. Male criminals, on the other hand, begin early, as boys of 12 and even younger, stealing pennies from newsstands and oranges from fruit stands. They know they will never be seriously punished for these petty thefts, which, in the course of a week, may amount to a few dollars.

By the time they are grown up such safe pilferings are not enough to live on, but the habit of stealing is too strong for them to settle down to any hard, honest labor. They become wagon bouncers, men who steal out of delivery wagons, and finally join a mob, where some expert teaches them the art of stealing or murdering without getting caught.

Steve promptly installed my brother Joe in the vacant bedroom which John and June had vacated, and gave him as a roommate Freddy Schoenhardt, one of the two members of the mob who were later to take their leader for a ride. That was the arrangement of the flat when I first belonged to the gang, but it did not last long. In fact, we rarely remained a whole month in any one place.

This is another of the miseries of a life of crime. You can't hope to have any permanent home or more personal property than you can throw into a couple of suitcases at a moment's notice. No sooner would we be comfortably settled somewhere than Steve, Freddy or Harold or some other member who lived outside, would come in and anxiously ask:

"Who's the palooka down in the hall that burned me up as I came in?"

Then there would be an argument. Was the "palooka" a plain clothes "dick," and if so, did he really "burn him up" (stare critically at him) or was it just imagination? Usually the man who thought he had been "burned up" would go out and I would follow at the right distance to size the stranger up and see if he was really "giving him the eye." Before we got through everybody would take a look.

"When in doubt, move," is the rule of the underworld, and as we were always in doubt we were always moving.

Two or three times a week, anywhere from 3 to 5 o'clock in the morning, a fascinating little ceremony would be held around the parlor or dining-room table of our flat, when we all came home from "work." Usually it was Steve, Harold, Freddy and myself, but sometimes there might be another member of the mob. They all emptied their pockets on the table, the proceeds of the night's robberies. Occasionally there might be a few bits of jewelry, but usually only money. Steve did not like to bother with "sparklers," for reasons I will explain later. Steve would arrange the bills in nice, neat piles—all the $1 bills in one pile, $5's, $10's, $20's, and, if there were any $50's or $100's, each in a pile, according to the amount. Then he would divide the money into four equal shares—one for Freddy, one for Harold, one for himself and one for me.

When Gangsters Have to Fight It Out With the Police, Very Serious Results May Happen. In a Recent Battle in New York, Three Hold-Up Men, Two Policemen and a Child Were Killed, and Twelve Other Persons, Including Three More Policemen, Were Wounded.

Freddy and Harold would stick their money in their pocket, and Steve would pick up the other two piles and say to me, "How much do you need for tomorrow? You better let me keep most of this for you. I'm afraid you'll lose it." He never argued with me over what I asked for, but at the same time he kept for me most of my money.

As I watched them dividing up the money, sometimes it seemed to me that I could see shadows on the wall; visions of what might happen to them sooner or later.

Steve paid all the expenses of the flats, and, as far as I know, never even asked the other boys to kick in with any share of the rent. I always had plenty of money, and for the first time in my life was able to wear just the sort of things I wanted. I bought myself silk stockings, $10 shoes, silk underthings, and a couple of pretty dresses. I could have bought more dresses, but I was so excited by this life that I was leading that I did not care much for clothes, and there were other reasons. Steve was always very particular about his own clothes, but he didn't seem to know whether a woman was wearing a calico apron or a $300 Paris model. They looked all the same to him.

Now if that scene of dividing the loot were exactly and truthfully reproduced in a moving picture it could not fail to make a lot of honest, hard-working young men and women feel pangs of envy. Each share might be anywhere from CHARLIE SQUIRES, a cowboy [illegible] Ward's Bar W [illegible] horse back [illegible] finds a [illegible] at the bottom [illegible].

[illegible] Pete Black [illegible] at the Bar W [illegible] Saul Atkinson [illegible] his papers [illegible] collar button has been [illegible].

[illegible] Ward [illegible] and Sally Atkinson, the murdered man's daughter [illegible] Tapping [illegible] Pete Black and [illegible] the sheriff says he has done [illegible] secretary [illegible] a telegram.

[illegible] Ward was [illegible].

Sally sees Pete Black skulking about the ranch that night and believes [illegible] he is the murderer of her father.

Sally starts out the next morning with Charlie Squires, whom she [illegible] Heflin's playboy son [illegible] Devil's [illegible]. It is discovered that Heflin has disappeared [illegible].

Charlie will neither confirm nor deny that he is Claude Heflin. At [illegible] encounter Pete. Sally [illegible] a murderer and lashes [illegible] with her quirt.

Ginger Scullion learns that at ten [illegible] Heflin retired [illegible] to his room. At eleven his secretary tapped at his door only to be told [illegible] that his employer wished to be left alone. In Heflin's bag Ginger discovers a collar with a brown smudge. He believes it to be Atkinson's.

Returning from the Slide, Sally meets the sheriff and tells him why she suspects Pete and whom she suspects Charlie to be. The evidence against Pete is only circumstantial while it would give Charlie a motive murdering his father in order to inherit his fortune.

At the Slide Ginger examines an overhanging rock jutting out above the spot Atkinson must have gone over. He finds marks of high heeled boots leading back through the [illegible] to the trail and one flat heeled [illegible] as though the murderer had returned to make sure he had left nothing.

Pete has an altercation with Charlie at Manate that evening and on the way back to the ranch Charlie is shot in the shoulder from ambush.

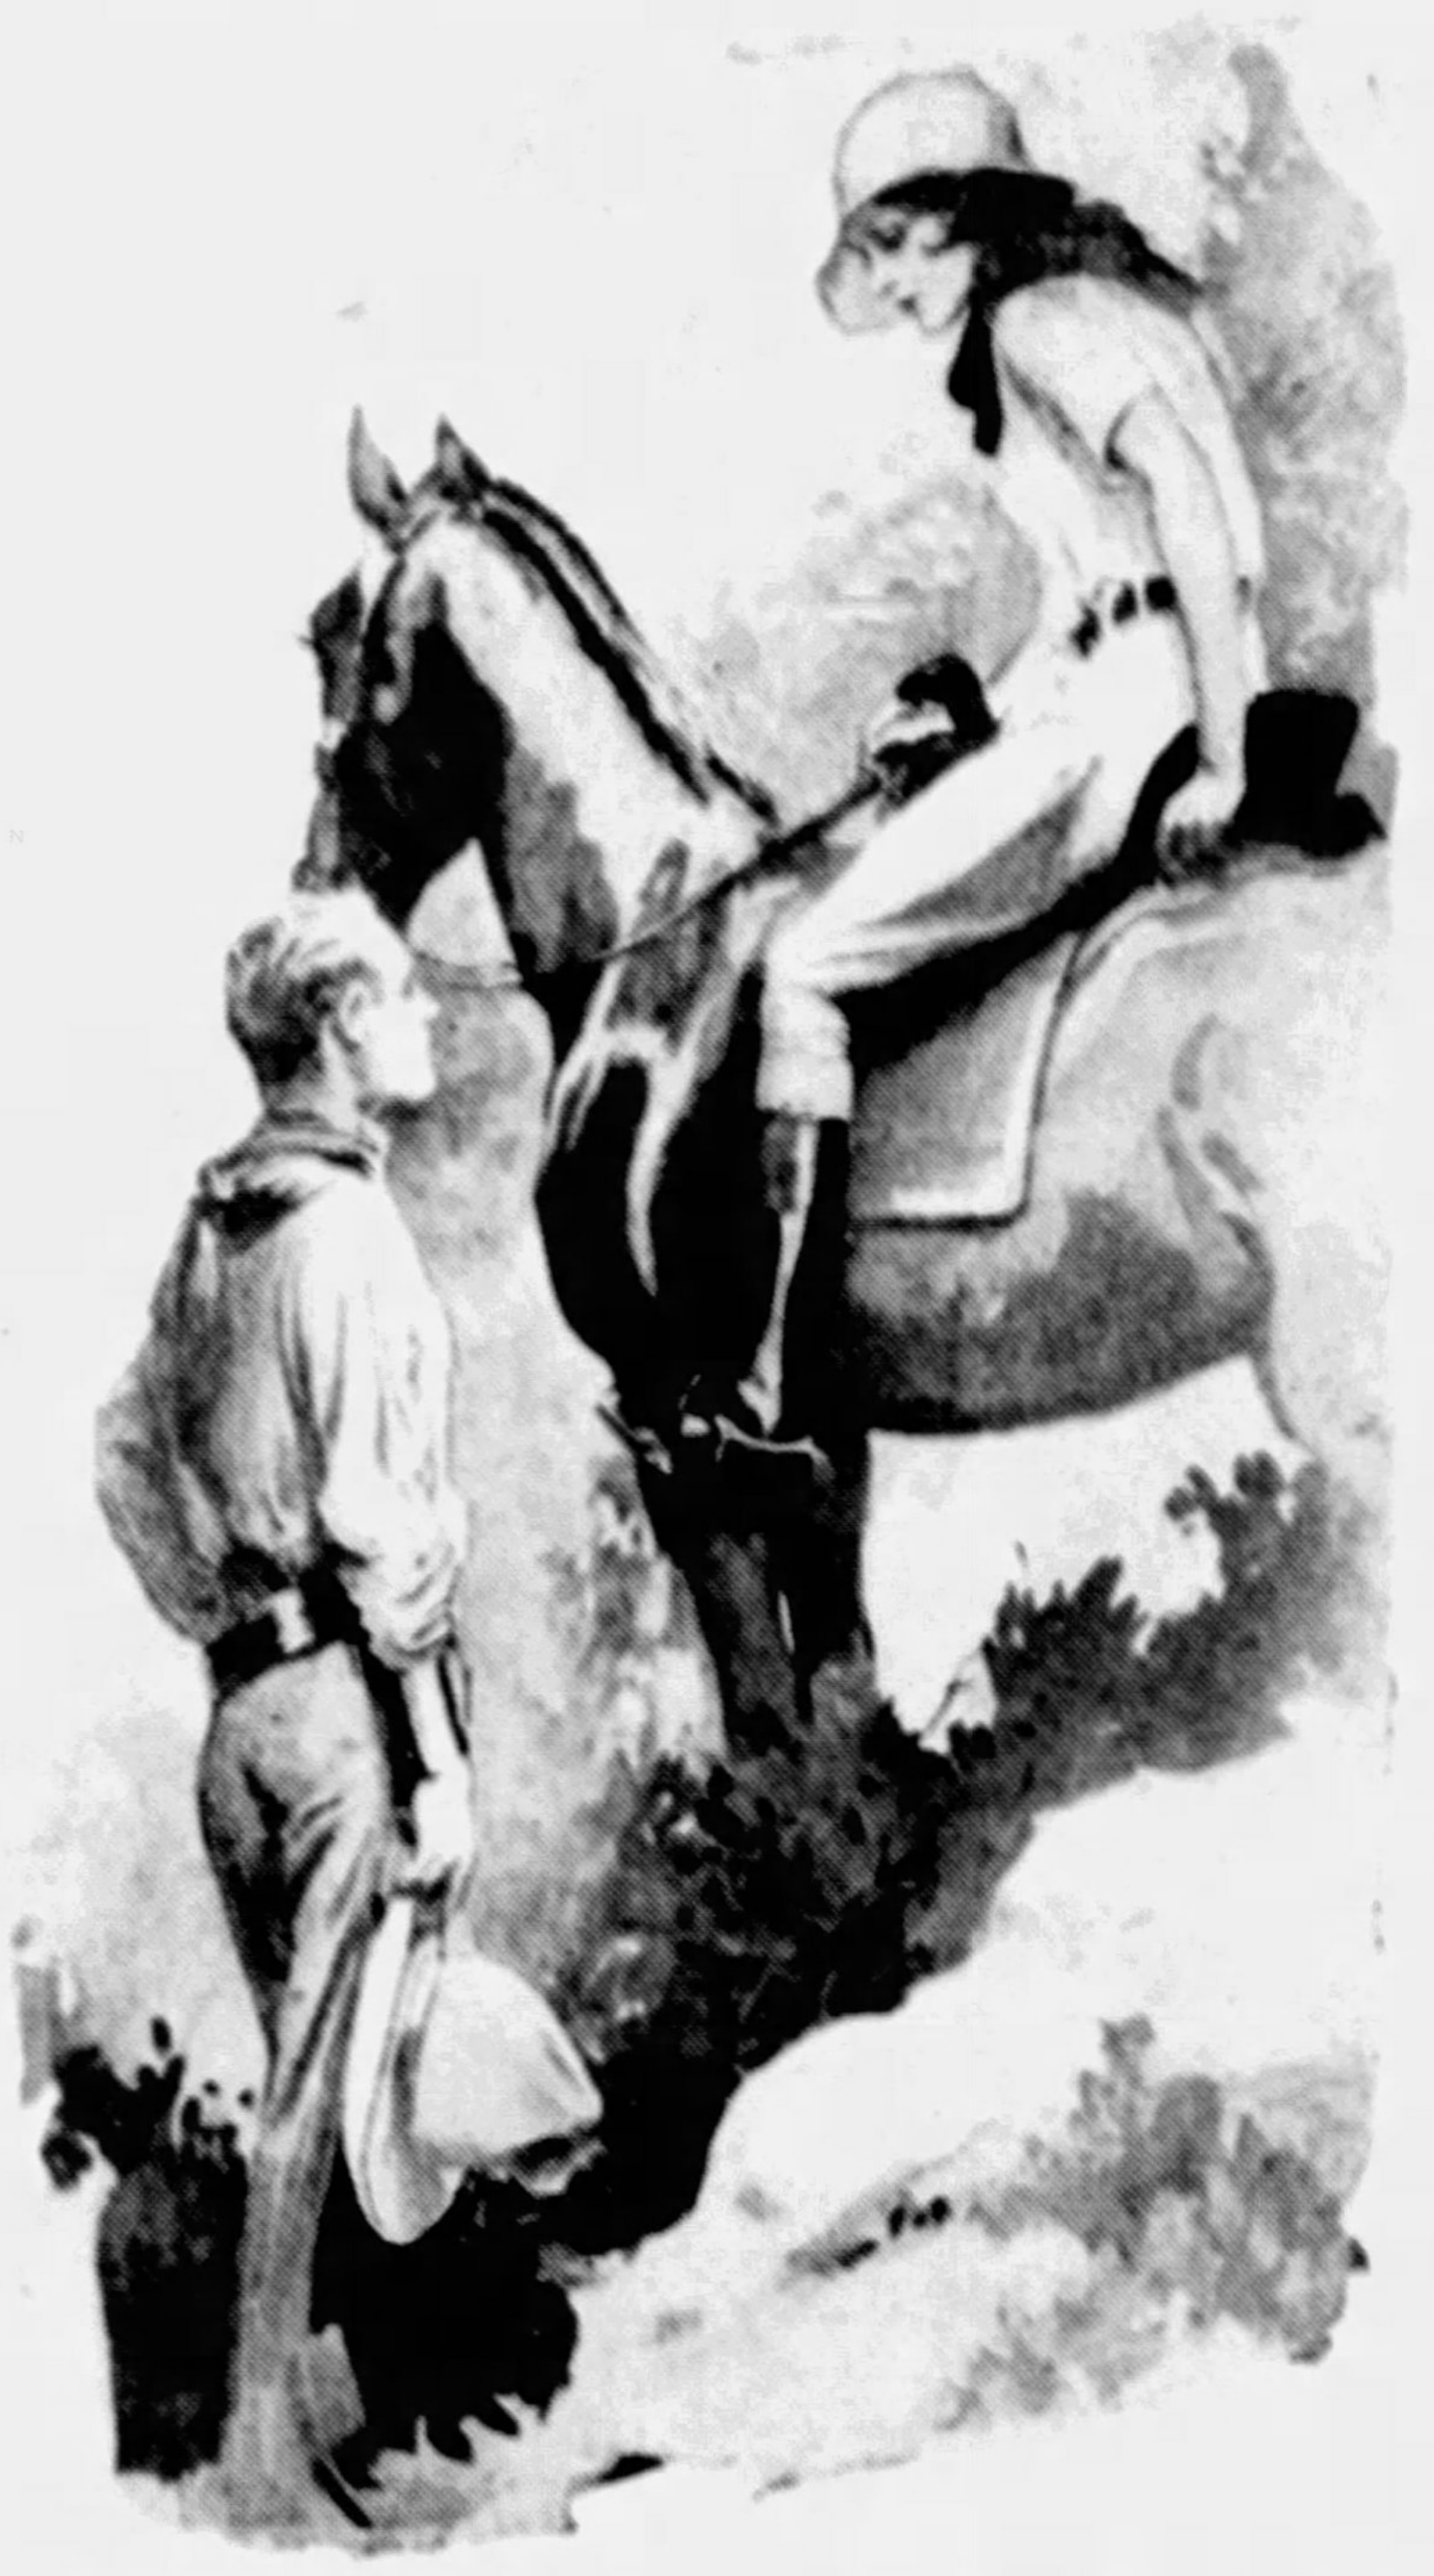
In Atkinson's suitcase is found a [illegible] Must be on Summit Trail [illegible] papers. H. H.

Tapping disappears after being [illegible] to Manate. It is learned that he has gone to Green Lake [illegible].

Pete [illegible] return to the ranchhouse before Atkinson was killed. He had a talk with the cook and the house boy overheard him say something about murder. Pete has admitted he returned to talk with the cook but the cook when questioned denies he talked to Pete at all.

Pete turns up at Green Lake where he has a long talk with a Mr. Jacobsen who has been buying leases and options on surrounding farms. After their talk a very frightened Mr. Jacobsen signs the leases and options over to Pete.

Ginger also pays a call to Green Lake and finds Pete and Tapping busy with maps and legal documents. The sheriff tries to get Pete to talk but without much success.



Every Way Sally Looked, Pete Black Was There, Blocking the Path as He Had Blocked Summit Trail to Her Passage.

CHAPTER XVIII

Ginger Spreads His Hand.

THE old sheriff looked expectantly at Pete.

"I wish you would help me out with a little explanation," he urged. But getting no response from Pete, who was thoughtfully studying the ceiling while his head rested against the top bar of the brass bed, he went on.

"What size shoe do you wear, Pete?"

The cowboy glanced down at his heavy boot and thrust it out toward Ginger.

"Look it over," he suggested.

"You were wearing riding boots the morning Atkinson was killed. Were you wearing flat-heeled shoes the next morning?"

"I was," said Pete. A slow smile spread over his face. "I get you, Ginger. So you found that little cranny behind the rocks. Hope I didn't mess up the evidence any."

"There was only one flat-heeled footprint," agreed Ginger. "Only one, planted right alongside Riding Boots. You didn't mess up the evidence."

"That's good," said Pete.

"Riding Boots and Flat Heel wore mighty near the same size shoe," insinuated the sheriff gently.

Pete's expression hardened. "So that's it!"

"I'm not accusing you, Pete. I'm asking you."

"Well, Riding Boots looked a bit smaller to me."

"Mebbe so. Mebbe so. Let it go at that, then. Now what about that chat you had with Long Sam when you came back to the ranch just after Atkinson's death? You sort of dodged answering questions about it at the inquest. And Long Sam lied to me when I asked him what was discussed."

"Why, the old horse thief!" said Pete, pretending a shocked surprise. "I'll bet he's a bum liar, too."

"Tom says you were talking about a murder."

"Does he think we were playing fortune teller? Forecasting Atkinson's death before it happened? That would have been a trifle reckless, wouldn't it?"

"You sent him out of the kitchen before you spoke to Sam," the sheriff reminded him.

"So I did. And the sneak listened. Well, well," said Pete. "When I think of the opportunities I've passed up for kicking that pest, I'm almost ready to sign up for another season at the Bar W."

"You're not helping me any, Pete," said Ginger sternly. "Nor yourself, either. Will you tell me what you were doing at the ranchhouse the evening Mr. Heflin vanished?"

Pete was silent, his eyes narrowed and angry. He knew who had told the sheriff of that visit.

"It wasn't the girl that brought you, was it?" asked Ginger. "I heard you were interested there, though it didn't seem likely, her being so bitter against you and so sure you were the killer and all. And you hadn't even met her then, had you?"

Pete remained silent, but a dangerous quality had entered his stillness. The eyes that he lifted to meet the sheriff's were black with sudden wrath.

"Any more questions?" he asked in a hard voice.

Ginger teetered to and fro on the rear legs of the chair that held him.

"Pete," he began again, "how old are you?"

"None," said Pete curtly, "of your business."

"You're young," accused the sheriff sadly. "Very young."

"I'm a thief," said Pete. "And a murderer. A crook and a kidnaper. If you've got a warrant for me, serve it. If you haven't, get out of here."

"When they're young, they're bitter," explained Ginger aloud. "You needn't take it out on me, though. You know that you don't give a whoop whether I think you killed Saul Atkinson or not. You're sore because the girl thinks so. And sore because I mentioned it."

"Will you get out?" demanded Pete. He straightened his long legs and stood up.

"I will not. Sit down. Sit down, I say! That's better," as Pete reluctantly squatted on the edge of the bed, his blue eyes fixed grimly on the speaker. "All right. I'll drop that subject. I said I was going to spread my hand. There's one other man, Pete, who might have had a motive for killing Atkinson. He was as near, or nearer, to the scene of the murder as yourself. But we haven't a scrap of real evidence against him, other than his name."

"What's that?" Mr. Tapping folded the documents on the bed and stowed them away in his side pocket. He veered around and showed curiosity. "How could a man's name connect him with the murder?"

"This man's name is Claude Heflin," said Ginger dryly.

"Claude Heflin!"

"I don't believe it," said Pete, slowly. The prim lips of Mr. Tapping twitched into a brief smile.

"Charlie Squires is old Heflin's son," explained Ginger. "Miss Atkinson found it out for us. She had seen a picture of him in the room of one of her girl friends in New York and that, coupled with a few other trifles, made her believe that he might be Claude. For one thing, he admitted to her that he was not using his own name. Also, she happened to know that Claude had quarreled with his father, been kicked out by him, and had recently been living in Colorado. After she told her story to us, a telegram East located him as actually at the Bar W, and a description identified him."

"And why is little Claudie supposed to have done the brutal killing?" asked Pete, obviously interested, but still with an edge to his voice. "You can't hang a man just for his name."

"It gives us the motive," Ginger explained patiently. "We know he had the opportunity. He was the first man on the spot after the killing. Nothing to hinder his claiming to have arrived some minutes after he actually got there. Now that we know he is Mr. Heflin's son and that he was not on speaking terms with his father, we can easily imagine a motive. He may have known of his father's interest in this land down here and decided to get some of his own back by going after it. He may not have intended to kill Saul Atkinson, just to steal the papers, and then had his hand forced by being recognized or something like that."

Pete shook his head with decision.

"The man who killed Saul Atkinson intended to kill him," he stated firmly. "That murder was as calculated and vile a bit of work as was ever planned in advance by a rotten hound of a murderer."

"I am very glad to hear you say so," said Ginger Scullion. And meant it.

"But Claude Heflin did not do it."

Ginger took his cigar out of his mouth and looked at it. "U'mmmm," he said, doubtfully, turning it about in his fingers.

"Claude Heflin did not kill Saul Atkinson," reiterated Pete Black. "But I can tell you who did kill him."

He leaned forward and for the second time that afternoon recited the story of Atkinson's murder.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Wounded Man.

CHARLIE SQUIRES lay in bed in the ranchhouse, his gun under his pillow and his mind alert, and studied the possibilities. He was in a hole. There was no doubt he was in a hole. Like a cornered rat, he studied the situation, looking from side to side and seeking desperately a way out. How simple it had seemed at the start; a little bluff, a threat or two, and certain comfort for himself the rest of his life. Instead . . .

Again and again Charlie wrenched his mind away from his gloomy visions and sought distraction. He watched Sally moving quickly and competently about the room, cool, assured, fearless, and forgot his prejudice against red hair. Since she was gentle to him in his wounded condition, he believed it was his charm that had tamed her. When he thought of her attack upon Pete, the memory was a pleasing one. To himself she seemed kind and he did not reflect that there are few women who can be harsh to a man while he lies, white and weak, upon pillows of which she had the propping. Her cordiality, however, was far from being as extensive as Charlie pictured to his mates when they visited him, but his brags and prognostications inflamed his imagination and he was one of those men who come easily to believe their own lies. Shorty's intervention augmented rather than checked his ardor. It was not such as Shorty that he feared.

After the cowboy left the room, Charlie lay still in his bed, breathing deeply and angrily and assuring himself that if he had been up, Shorty wouldn't have gotten away with it so easily. There were reasons why Charlie did not wish to resort to his gun at that juncture. Later, now . . . He promised himself that later he would have a reckoning with Shorty.

Sally asked if there were anything she could do for him. Irritably, annoyed with her because Shorty had dared to interfere with him, he shook his head. She remained by his bedside, studying him thoughtfully.

"Dr. Burke says you are much better. The fever is all gone. You can get up for a bit this afternoon."

He groaned.

"That means back to the bunkhouse for Charlie."

"I am sure Mr. Ward won't make you move until you're quite ready. He has been very anxious about you."

"About me?" said Charlie, surprised.

"You know he has. Perhaps he's a bit more worried about the way the Bar W people, both visitors and hands, seem to have been selected for trouble than about you personally, but that's only natural."

"What does he think about my being shot?" asked Charlie. "Blames me, I suppose."

"How silly! Why should he?"

"I know Gil Ward. I'll bet you a nickel he does. Or a kiss. Take me on for a kiss, Sally?"

She ignored both the use of her first name and the suggested bet. "He and Dr. Burke were talking the matter over last night after the inquest. Dr. Burke thinks the attempt to kill you is tied up with . . . with my father's death," said Sally, holding her voice steady with an effort. "He thinks the same man is back of all the terrible things that have been happening, your wound and dad's murder and Mr. Heflin's vanishing. Mr. Ward disagrees with him."

"What's his idea?"

"Well, he knows that you had a fuss with Pete Black just before you were shot at and thinks

How To Really Get Rid Of Arm And Leg Hair

Utterly Without the Problem of Coarsened Re-growth

By a total lack of stubble you can feel the difference between this and old ways.

Not only is slightest fear of coarsened re-growth banished but actual reappearance of hair is slowed amazingly.

A Discovery That is Proving to the Wonder of the Cosmetic World That Hair Can Not Only Be Removed Instantly, But Its Reappearance Delayed Amazingly.

A way of removing arm and leg hair has been found that not only removes every vestige of hair instantly, but that banishes the stimulated hair growth thousands of women are charging to the razor and less modern ways. A way that not only removes hair, but delays its reappearance remarkably.

It is changing previous conceptions of cosmeticians about hair removing. Women are flocking to its use. The creation of a noted laboratory, it is different from any other hair remover known.

What It Is

It is an exquisite toilet creme resembling a superior beauty clay in texture. You simply spread it on where hair is to be removed. Then rinse off with water. That is all. Every vestige of hair is gone; so completely that even by running your hand across the skin not the slightest trace of stubble can be felt. And—the reappearance of that hair is delayed surprisingly!

When re-growth finally does come, it is utterly unlike the re-growth following the razor and old ways. You can feel the difference. No sharp stubble. No coarsened growth.

The skin, too, is left as soft as a child's. No skin roughness, no enlarged pores. You feel freer than probably ever before in your life of annoying hair growth.

Where to Obtain

It is called NEET—and is on sale at all drug and department stores and beauty parlors. Costs only a few cents. 278RA

The D[illegible] Ra[illegible] Mystery

By M[illegible] P[illegible]

that might have had something to do with the shooting.

"Maybe it did," [illegible] who knew perfectly well [illegible] shot at him and [illegible] out sure to [illegible] the [illegible] others.

"Of course I did," said Sally promptly. "There [illegible] men around here who [illegible] me no. Ambushing you that way makes it perfectly plain to me that Pete Black did it."

To her intense surprise [illegible] he laid back against the [illegible] and began to laugh. He laughed for several minutes and each time that he stopped [illegible] her surprised and offended face he went off into another outburst. Eventually he pulled himself together [illegible] he [illegible] "Women's reasons are [illegible] funny."

"I don't think [illegible] any funnier than a man's reasons. Dr. Burke, for instance, admits that all the evidence [illegible] my father's [illegible] and Mr. Heflin's disappearance point to Pete Black but he insists that he could not have had a hand in either just because [illegible] If we could divide the men who are that sort and who aren't that sort as easily as that [illegible] to any murders because all the possible killers would be under restraint."

"True. Very true," said Charlie, chuckling again.

"Of course Mr. Ward doesn't know as much about the case as Doctor Burke and you and I do. Ginger Scullion made everyone [illegible] not to tell anyone else that you are Mr. Heflin's son."

Charlie Squires sat straight up in bed, ignoring his wounded shoulder.

"Did you tell those two that I was Charlie Heflin?"

"Of course I did," Sally [illegible] don't mind. Why, they had [illegible] that you were [illegible] likely to have killed my father as Pete Black just because you were there at the same time. Naturally I had to tell them why I knew you wouldn't have done it. They didn't believe me at first but when they wired [illegible] and Mr. Heflin's lawyer described you to them and said you were here they admitted I was right. Yet still they don't arrest Pete Black!"

Slowly, Charlie relaxed his tense pose.

"I'd sort of liked to have seen that lawyer's description of me. How the other fellow sees us, you know."

"He didn't say much. Just that you were blonde, blue eyed, six feet tall and were known to be at the Bar W as late as last Summer. He took up most of his telegram asking about Mr. Heflin. Ginger is trying to keep people from learning that he has really disappeared but it is hard to do. His lawyer was pretty curious. Ginger says that if Mr. Heflin gets back safely, he'll be very grateful to have had it kept quiet and if he is dead, his having kept it still won't make any difference to anybody and would have given him a better chance at catching the murderer."

Charlie nodded. "That's sensible enough. Only I think a good many of the boys here do know about it. You said Ward didn't know about me, though?" he repeated. "Who I really am?"

"Not yet."

"You are not to tell him," ordered Charlie sharply. "Nor anyone else. Understand?"

"I have already promised Ginger not to talk about it," Sally answered with dignity, moving away from the bedside. She went to the table where she kept his medicines, his chart and other nursing paraphernalia and began to straighten them, ignoring him. He watched her for a minute in silence.

"I want to get back at that villain," he said at last. "The fewer who know who I am and what I am doing, the better I can work." Which for Charlie Squires was an exceptionally truthful statement.

"What are you going to do?"

"I don't know ... yet."

"Are you going to stay here and look for your father or go down to Oklahoma and try to get that land that he was after?"

"My father might be down there himself. No one knows where he is."

"I suppose he might be. And if he's not, you could look after his interests for him. With my father dead and yours kept out of the way, they may be grabbing everything he wanted. Maybe that is why they are holding him; to give themselves a free hand. If you could only stop that ..."

"I don't see how I could," grumbled Charlie. "I don't even know where the land he wanted is located."

"I could tell you that."

"Oh, you could!" To Sally's surprise, there appeared a distinct expression of alarm in his eyes. "For heaven's sake, don't go advertising that around!"

"Of course not!"

"I mean not to anyone," insisted Charlie. "Don't let anyone at all know it."

"I won't."

"There's another trifling matter. The raising of enough money to buy the land. The disinherited [illegible] [illegible]" Charlie paused to clear his throat "doesn't have a man with much in his pocket."

"You wouldn't need such a [illegible] [illegible] says [illegible] She [illegible] [illegible] Mr. [illegible] New York [illegible] good banker. You could use [illegible]"

[illegible] the matter [illegible] she had [illegible] to his bedside. He put [illegible]

"[illegible] do that for [illegible]" said Sally.

His fingers twitched as she [illegible] the hand. It was for [illegible] that he was [illegible]

"[illegible] of doing it [illegible]" she stated [illegible] father's [illegible] to make the [illegible] death. [illegible]

"I was thinking of myself. Mr. Heflin told me that dad was to share in the profits of this deal. [illegible] contract somewhere around which [illegible] in what proportions. If [illegible] your father should not come back you would have to divide with [illegible]. But we won't think of that yet."

"I'd love to divide with you," said Charlie, gazing at her with ardent eyes.

"Well, you'd have to." She turned away. "Time for your luncheon. Tom is late today."

Charlie made another grab at her hand and just managed to catch it before she could get out of range.

"Hang my luncheon! Don't be so doggone tight. You know I'm just crazy about you, Sally."

"Let go of my hand!"

"I'm ... afraid ... I'll ... have ... to!" He spoke gaspingly, groaned and collapsed against his pillows. Frightened, she leaned over him. His well arm went across her shoulders and drew her down. His lips sought, held and pressed hers.

"There!" he laughed triumphantly as she jerked herself free.

She might have served him then as she had served Pete Black. Certainly her anger was no less intense. But the bandage on his shoulder and her own sick disgust saved him. Her shoulders wriggled with loathing. That full, handsome mouth of Charlie Squires smiled as he watched her, expecting the protest that, in his experience, was the next move in his favorite game. But without a word she swung to the door, furiously rubbing her mouth with her handkerchief, and left him.

As the door crashed shut behind her, Charlie chuckled. Shorty would interfere with him, would he? Ordering him to leave the girl alone! He'd show him! As for the girl, she wasn't really angry. They always pretended to be, of course. It was the correct move. She'd be back that afternoon, demanding an apology and using the demand as an excuse to reopen the subject. After which, things would get forwarder. Oh, an experienced person was Charlie Squires.

The door reopened and Gil Ward strode in.

"Well, Charlie," said he with deceptive pleasantness. "Getting a bit tired of us up here, I dare say. I asked the doctor and he said you could go back to the bunkhouse any time now."

"I like it here."

"But lonely, I should think. Not like being with the boys. He said you could dress up and move around a bit today, too. Only take it easy."

"I'm not ready to go back to the bunkhouse," said Charlie sullenly. He wondered how much of his talk with Sally had been overheard. He did not think it likely that she had complained of him to the ranch owner. Girls with that color hair preferred to handle their own disputes.

"And I want that foreman's job," he continued, avoiding Ward's eye. He turned a little on his side and thrust his hand under the pillow. The touch of what he kept there seemed to strengthen him and he looked up with exaggerated defiance. "I asked you for it before. Now I want it."

Ward smiled, a bit grimly.

"You haven't given it to anybody else yet. I'm going to have it."

"Are you trying to threaten me, Charlie?"

"I want that job."

The ranch owner's lips tightened a little as he stood gazing down on his recumbent employee, but his light gray eyes still showed a flicker of amusement. "You can stay here until morning," he said, finally ignoring the question of the demanded job and turned away.

"Wait a minute!" called Charlie.

Ward stopped but did not turn around. Every line of his back expressed contempt for the man on the bed. Longingly, Charlie fingered the gun under his pillow.

"Well?" asked Gil Ward.

"Did you tell Ginger what I told you about Pete?"

"Yes."

"What did he say?"

"Said he'd been hearing a whole lot about Pete lately."

"[illegible]?"

Now Ward did turn back, a [illegible] on his lips. "Yes. He's leaving for Oklahoma in the morning. He suggested that I keep [illegible] gone [illegible] you [illegible] Ward [illegible]

"I [illegible] to [illegible]" said [illegible]

"[illegible] Ginger [illegible] I thought you [illegible] But [illegible]" Ward [illegible] the door [illegible] taking [illegible] "the [illegible] what [illegible] was wrong about. Stay [illegible] to the bunkhouse. You won't get any more nursing."

"Says you!" said Charlie impertinently.

But somewhat to his chagrin the impertinence went unchallenged. Ward [illegible]

Having [illegible] felt [illegible] Sally [illegible] the unpleasant incident of the [illegible] behind [illegible] and [illegible] not to think of it. There was plenty else to occupy her mind. This was the day after the inquest, the third day after her father's death, the second after Mr. Heflin's disappearance and nothing seemed to have been done about either matter. Mr. Tapping had left the ranch before her return from her ride that first morning and she had no opportunity to challenge him concerning his acquaintance with Pete Black. True, Ginger Scullion planned to follow him to Oklahoma for questioning, but she had lost some of her faith in Ginger and in Dr. Burke since the farcical inquest (or so she termed it) whereat none of the vital matters she had discovered for them were exposed to the light of day. It almost seemed as though they were in a conspiracy to protect the murderer.

There was Mr. Heflin, too. Perhaps dead, perhaps hidden away and in danger of death. Why did not someone do something about rescuing him? She had heard a rumor that the oil man himself was suspected of killing her father and of having run away to avert capture, but she wasted little thought on that, to her palpable absurdity. The matter of the collar that was found in Mr. Heflin's suitcase she explained readily enough. Mr. Tapping could easily have placed it there.

And that, of course, led back to Pete Black, Mr. Tapping's co-conspirator. Every way you looked he was there, blocking the path as he had blocked Summit Trail to her passage. Sally smiled, recalling his startled eyes as she pivoted Green Hat to avoid him.

His eyes were a brighter and

IN an eastern city there is a famous child specialist. Every day babies and young children are brought to him from far and near. To every mother he promptly puts one question: "How are your baby's bowels?" » » He knows how quickly and easily little bowels get out of order. Too much food ... not just the right foods ... then trouble, because the body is not kept clear of poisonous waste matter. » » Often in these cases, this famous physician advises an old time-tested remedy, Castoria! » » He sends many anxious mothers home with this simple advice: "Give your baby a dose of Castoria tonight. No supper; no food until morning. » » "Always," he warns, "when a little fever, a little cold develops, or the stomach gets upset, the first step is to get rid of the excess wastes that clog the body. » » "I like the way Castoria acts—just mild enough, just effective enough. I could not write a better prescription." » » Castoria is unique because it is made specially for children's ailments. For tiny infants tied up with colic pains, for older children with clogged bowels, Castoria is effective. » » Another thing—you never have to coax children to take Castoria. They like its taste as well as the comfort of its regulation which they have learned to know. That's why it's always said of Castoria, "Children Cry For It." » » As the children's doctor urges, "Don't let simple little ailments develop into serious ones." Keep Castoria always on hand to help. Be sure to ask for genuine Castoria—which always has the name of Chas. H. Fletcher on the package.

A PURE VEGETABLE PREPARATION MADE SPECIALLY FOR CHILDREN'S AILMENTS

Castoria is a pure vegetable product. It contains nothing harmful, nothing harsh; NO NARCOTICS. The formula is printed on the carton. It has no severe purgative action—just easy regulation. Castoria now comes in two sizes. The new family size contains about 2½ times the amount in the regular size.

CASTORIA

CHILDREN CRY FOR IT

Are they whispering about You?

EVEN before we're aware of it ourselves, others notice the penetrating hint of perspiration. They're bound to whisper, finally to avoid us.

No girl need run this risk! We all perspire, and underthings constantly absorb these acids and odors. But there is one sure way to know you're fresh and sweet.

For gentle Lux removes acids and odors completely. Protects colors and fabrics. Simply make this a habit ... Lux underthings and stockings after every wearing. It takes only 4 minutes, or less.

AVOID OFFENDING ... Underthings absorb perspiration odor—protect daintiness this easy 4-minute way:

Wash this 4-minute way. One tablespoon of Lux does one day's undies ... stockings, too! Use lukewarm water—Lux dissolves instantly in it. Squeeze suds through, rinse twice.

Wash after each wearing, for perspiration left in silk fades colors and rots threads. Lux removes perspiration acids and odors completely.

Never rub dainty lingerie with cake soap. Rubbing tends to streak and wear out silk.

Avoid ordinary soaps—cakes, powders, chips. These often contain harmful alkali which weakens threads, fades color. Lux has no harmful alkali. Anything safe in water alone is safe in Lux.

Economize safely with fresh orange juice and delicious orange dishes. Not in years have such fine oranges cost so little!

TODAY – when health is all-important – orange prices are unusually reasonable. California has produced an abundance of Sunkist Oranges – sizes you like to buy – "juice-full" – the finest in many years!

Use them liberally to make economy meals more enjoyable and better for you.

Start days right for all the family with fresh orange juice. Give better balance to meals with quick salads, fruit cups and desserts.

Ask your doctor. He will explain why oranges are important in your regular diet:

- Oranges help to balance your diet and to correct many common diet faults.
- Recently science has found that the protective elements in oranges are vital to sound teeth and bones. Experiments show that when these elements are missing from the diet, the addition of generous daily amounts of fresh orange juice will tend to arrest consequent tooth decay, gum troubles and pyorrhea.
- Oranges help build up resistance to many common infections.
- They help to prevent acidosis of both the acid-ash and acetone types.
- They aid digestion by stimulating appetite.
- They contain essential minerals.
- They are a recognized source of vitamins A and B.
- They are an excellent source of vitamin C, having at least twice as much as apples, bananas, pineapples or tomato juice.

For these reasons millions of people now make it a daily habit to drink two, full-sized (8 oz.) glasses of fresh orange juice with the juice of half a lemon in each.

"Wanda and I are going home now, Janice," Noel Said Quietly, Ignoring Kent Entirely. "Would you not like to come with us? I think you'd better, you know."

CHAPTER XXIX

Wanda Tries Intrigue

THE clamor of the telephone snapped Janice out of the depression Lance's rather cold leave-taking had plunged her into.

"What luck finding you in, sweetheart," came Kent's voice over the wire. "I suppose there's no hope of persuading you to come with me to the Mask and Domino Ball at Nice tonight?"

"I'm afraid there isn't . . ." Janice began.

Kent sighed. "That's what I told Wanda Maitland. I met her in front of the hotel a few minutes ago. She told me your husband and family had just gone off to Marseilles for the night. She suggested I ask you to this show. They're going over in a party, I believe."

Janice pricked up her ears. Why should Wanda of all people suggest Kent take her over to some ball at Nice?

"Who's going with them?" she asked.

"I've forgotten the names. She rattled them off so quickly. But I did catch the name of your handsome hero, my pet."

"Oh," said Janice. She sat, for a moment, staring down at her shoe. Then she asked, "Did she ask us to join her party?"

"Well, not exactly," said Kent. "She merely asked why I didn't take you. You'll be interested to hear she thought you'd be awfully keen to come with me now that hubby's away!"

"I am interested," Janice murmured. She added, a moment later, "I think I'll go, after all, Kent."

"Good girl!" cried Kent. He added, dubiously, "We'll waive that friendship pact for tonight, won't we, darling?"

"Yes, we'll waive it . . . in public, at least," Janice murmured. "I'm afraid I can't promise more than that."

"I am sinking so low I'm even grateful for crumbs," he laughed back at her. "The hotel will tell you where you can hire a domino, sweetheart. The colors this year are orange and green."

* * *

Janice felt she had never seen anything so magnificent in her life.

The Municipal Hall at Nice was ablaze with decorations.

Two jazz bands were massed on a decorated stage. Directly one stopped another began. The crowded floor below swayed and whirled, syncopated and paused. The sight was an odd one because of the similarity in everyone's costume. Hundred's of masked green and orange dominos dancing together. You couldn't tell them apart.

"Heaven knows what would happen if you lost your girl here. You'd never find her again," Kent prophesied.

Just then they collided with another couple. The man said, "I'm sorry," in a voice whose low huskiness could belong only to one man in the world. Or, at least, Janice thought so. But she was prejudiced. Something like a sharp shock ran through her. She felt her whole being tingle.

The next moment she was laughing confusedly. She called after them, "I forgive you, Noel. Even though you have ruined my toes!"

"Janice!" He stood still where he was, unmindful of the other dancers. He stared wildly about him. But already Janice and Kent had slipped amongst the other dancers out of sight.

"Mr. Wilburn told me Mrs. Saunders and he had planned to come here tonight," Wanda remarked to Noel as they went on dancing.

"But I thought she'd gone with the others to Marseilles," Noel murmured. "Lance was to see a specialist, I understood."

Wanda smiled. "Naturally she didn't want to go with them when there was the prospect of coming over here with Mr. Wilburn! She's rather keen on him, don't you think?"

"No, I don't think," Noel said sharply. He looked really angry suddenly. The veins stood out on his forehead. "She has a husband, you know," he added, a dangerous quietness in his voice.

"You are a sweet old fashioned darling," Wanda laughed. "I know that should be the answer and I agree with you, of course. I wish things were more like that. Decent, straight forward, honorable. But, alas . . ." she shrugged.

"You're not trying to tell me there's anything between Janice and that Wilburn fellow?" Noel demanded incredulously.

"Noel dear, there's such a thing as using your own eyes," she murmured with a little sigh. "Everyone in the hotel has been talking about it. It's so blatantly obvious. We're all so sorry for the poor husband, I know. I feel it especially as I know Mrs. Devorn so well. But, really, none of us would be in the least surprised if she cleared off with him any moment!"

For a time after that they danced together in silence. Rather a strained silence. Wanda bit her reddened lower lip. Had she let her tongue run away with her and gone too far?

"Rot," Noel said at last. "If Janice is going about with Kent Wilburn she's only amusing herself. She'd . . . she'd never go back on Lance."

Wanda's eyes fell. She watched her small orange slippers as they followed his black patent ones for a few moments before she murmured. "It all depends on what you mean by going back on him. Of course, as you say, she may not actually leave him. A wealthy husband is convenient at times. Especially a sweet unsuspecting one like Mr. Saunders."

"You've got her all wrong," Noel said angrily. "She's devoted to Lance."

"Maybe," Wanda's lips curled skeptically. "But not devoted enough, it seems, to have given up this dance and gone with him into Marseilles!"

Noel felt, unhappily, he had no argument to put up against that. And, in the pause, Wanda's arm tightened about his great shoulders possessively.

"I'm only trying to make you see what she's like for your own good, Noel," she whispered. "It would hurt me awfully if you fell under her spell like the rest of them. You know, only a woman sees another woman as she really is."

Noel didn't quite know what to make of that. Was Wanda admitting she cared for him? At least, cared sufficiently to mind what happened to him? The realization took his breath away. Being the least vain of men, it had never occurred to him that Wanda might have grown fond of him. He'd thought she merely felt friendly towards him, as he felt towards her. Certainly, she had persuaded her mother to change their plans at the last moment in order to bring him down here from Paris. Also, they had both stayed on at the same hotel in Monte Carlo ever since. Still, until this moment he hadn't seen anything unusual in it. He liked Wanda. Except, of course, when she was maligning Janice. And he didn't put that down to jealousy. He merely thought she was mistaken. And, naturally, she couldn't know how he felt about Janice!

In the pause, Wanda whispered, "You know, Noel, you're worth so much more . . . than being merely a tame cat to a pretty married woman, however charming she may be!"

Still Noel didn't know what to say. He felt utterly tongue-tied. Sweet of her, of course, to be so concerned about him. All the same, he wished she wouldn't. It made him feel wretchedly uncomfortable and a perfect mutt to boot.

"Look here, Wanda, you're talking a lot of rot, honestly," he stammered. "I'm not worth worrying about——"

She drew herself up a little. Her face was brought closer to his. "You're not worth so little . . . to me, Noel," she whispered. The next moment she bent her head. With a little wrench she pulled herself out of his arms. "I'm making a fool of myself, Noel," her voice was broken, husky with tears. "Don't follow me, please."

She ducked away from him, through the other dancers, making towards the lounge. Noel was meant to follow her. Incidentally, he was meant to propose to her.

But Noel didn't follow her. He stood there, a huge tall figure in his green and orange domino. His eyes, behind the mask, searching, seeking . . . Janice. Already he had almost forgotten Wanda Maitland and her amazing admission. He had to find Janice. A thousand questions pounded through his brain. A thousand questions he had to have an answer to.

He felt he'd go mad unless he did. Was Janice deceiving Lance over Kent? But the thought was incredible. A dozen times he tried to put it out of his mind. But the little germ of suspicion Wanda had sown lingered painfully. Too, he couldn't help remembering what Janice had said on the raft the other day. Was it possible she was sweet on young Wilburn? Had she been sweet on him all the time? Was

The next moment [illegible] turned away from [illegible] Janice's white hands [illegible]. She moved her lips to call him back, but she didn't. "I love you, too," she whispered after him. "And oh, my dear, don't you see [illegible] everything between us [illegible] for good?"

CHAPTER XXX

Janice's Scheme Works

KENT [illegible]

[illegible]

"[illegible]" Kent grinned lopsidedly. "My dear, he's the perfect prototype of Sir Lancelot and you're the modern Guinevere. Except that you're more virtuous! But why on earth you should want to shake your good knight off in this drastic way?"

Janice sighed. "You wouldn't understand, Kent. But I must. I must." Her small voice rose fiercely.

"All right, sweetheart, keep [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] with [illegible] were [illegible] so aptly.

Yet Noel was [illegible] he moved. Very slowly [illegible] Wanda's hand [illegible] toward the [illegible] Janice and Kent.

[illegible]

Wanda said, "We're going home [illegible] Janice," [illegible] "Would [illegible] to come with us?"

[illegible] "Why should I go home? I don't want to go home. [illegible]"

[illegible]

"If you weren't, I don't think you'd be sitting there with [illegible] around that man," Noel [illegible] momentarily losing [illegible] of himself.

"What's wrong with Kent?" she demanded. "Didn't you kiss me yourself in the ballroom just now?"

"[illegible] old chap," Kent laughed lightly.

"Will you be quiet? I wasn't speaking to you," Noel thundered. All the [illegible] his face had turned scarlet. Janice had hit him hard on a sore spot. But [illegible] didn't prove [illegible] She [illegible] At the time [illegible] playing with [illegible] at him [illegible] Wasn't [illegible] she warned [illegible] that was what he was doing. [illegible] But he had [illegible] what he saw with his own eyes. And, while he stood there looking down at them, his expression coldly [illegible] he was raw with [illegible] and disgust.

"Are you coming, Janice?" he asked curtly.

She threw out a bare arm as though to shoo him away. "Course I'm not! Kent and I have other arrangements, haven't we, boy?" and she winked broadly at Kent.

"You're right there, sweetheart," said Kent, rising unsteadily to his feet. "Pity to waste the best suite in the hotel, wouldn't it?"

It was only the second contribution Kent had made to the conversation. But it was to be his last. Noel's fist shot out with lightning quickness. It caught Kent full in the mouth. He went down [illegible] by a wooden ball.

"I think that will settle your [illegible] for the night at least," Noel remarked [illegible] "Now, Janice, if you're ready, we're going home."

They went.

That drive back to Monte Carlo was the worst drive Janice had ever taken. It was wretched. She sat in the back seat wedged in between Noel and Wanda. Neither of them said a word. Noel [illegible] on his knees, staring out of the window while he smoked one cigarette after another.

Occasionally, when they passed a light, Janice saw his profile faintly. His lips were drawn into [illegible] tight [illegible]. His eyes had a hollow, blank stare to them. She lay back watching him, fighting to keep the tears out of her eyes. That would be fatal. But how she longed to put her arms about him, to draw his great head down onto her shoulder, to run her fingers through his dark hair, to tell him the whole scene had been pre-arranged.

Oddly enough, as they drove [illegible] through the steel [illegible] darkness, she was thinking of the little mother who had died when he was a boy. Had she been alive, she might have helped him now. Helped to reinstate the ideal she, Janice, had shattered that night. She felt cold, small, frightened suddenly. What had she done? She had meant to kill his love, but had she done more than that? Had she killed his faith in all womanhood? Had she broken something that could never be repaired?

And, if she had, was anything worth it? Lance, anything at all? Everything she had done tonight she had done because of Lance. The debt she owed him.

Yet, somehow, she knew now, if she had to do it again, she couldn't go through with it. She had known Noel would be hurt. But, she had never dreamt she could hurt him to the extent she apparently had.

"Forgive me, Noel," her heart whispered during that long [illegible] drive. "Forgive me, dear."

Wanda sat on the other side of her. She gave Janice a [illegible] scornful profile. Her chin was tilted slightly, her long dark lashes dropped onto her cheeks. She hadn't said anything since one scathing remark when Noel had [illegible] her. "I do hope Mr. Saunders won't be [illegible] on the way home. It would be so [illegible]"

Quietly Janice could have murdered her. But she had to play the part [illegible] merely giggled. Yet [illegible] apparent [illegible] Wanda was secretly delighted. She couldn't have wished things to have happened other than they had. Janice had done for herself pretty thoroughly as far as Noel was concerned. Unlikely he'd want to dance attendance on her after this.

Janice's nerves were in tatters. They'd been ragged enough before she started the drive. But this continued silence made her desperate.

"You'd think I was a corpse and you were taking me to the morgue," she cried suddenly. "The corpse of a maiden aunt from whom you'd had expectations that weren't justified."

Noel growled, without looking at her. "What do you want us to say?"

Wanda murmured under her breath, "I should have thought you'd have said enough already tonight, Mr. Saunders."

"Did you?" cried Janice, losing control of herself suddenly. "Well, if you think I've said all I'd like to say to you, you're mistaken, Miss Wanda [illegible]!"

Wanda drew herself farther into the corner with what she meant to be a little shiver of disgust. It said plainly, "In moments like this I'm afraid you show your breeding—or lack of it, my dear."

Noel said in a low voice, "There's no need for you to insult Wanda, Janice."

Janice bit her lip sharply. It hurt so to have him stick up for Wanda against her, she could

◆ Keep Intestines Active and Clean, Doctors Say . . . . . . If You Want to Enjoy a Good Digestion ◆

HEART

INTESTINES

HERE'S WHERE poor digestion usually starts! When intestines are clogged, elimination is delayed—indigestion follows—headaches, dizziness.

DR. ROBERT LATZEL, the noted Vienna authority, says: "Fresh yeast keeps the body functioning properly—improves appetite and digestion."

"I CERTAINLY AGREE with what the great doctors say Fleischmann's Yeast will do for you," says Mrs. G. R. Woods, of St. Louis, Mo. "I never have indigestion or a headache now, because I always keep yeast in the house. Constipation . . . vanished. My skin became clear."

Copyright, 1932, Standard Brands Incorporated

RELIEF! Three cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast daily correct constipation. Headaches vanish. The skin soon clears up.

"It's very easy to correct 'ACID STOMACH'"!

"Scientific discoveries show fresh yeast improves digestion, increases appetite, builds up health," explains famous Vienna Physician

YOU know the symptoms. Sourness. Indigestion. Gas. That dull, bloated feeling after meals.

These troubles are very common. Yet—in the vast majority of cases—they are absolutely unnecessary, eminent physicians say!

For example—

"I have found that 'acid stomach,' heartburn, coated tongue, etc., are usually due to a stagnant condition of the intestines.

It is really very easy to correct this trouble . . . The best way to do this is to eat fresh yeast."

In these words the celebrated stomach specialist, Dr. Robert Latzel, sums up the results of a lifetime of medical experience. Dr. Latzel is physician-in-chief of the clinic for internal diseases in Vienna's largest free hospital. He adds:—

"Fresh yeast restores normal bowel action . . . improves digestion by increasing the flow of digestive juices, giving a healthy appetite and greater vitality."

Made a part of your regular diet, Fleischmann's Yeast stimulates and invigorates your whole digestive and intestinal tract. Accumulated food wastes are moistened and softened. Your body functions regularly again, eliminating poison-breeding residues in a normal way.

And as your system is gently cleansed and "toned," digestive secretions revive. Discomfort no longer follows eating. You really enjoy your meals once more!

So get rid of indigestion. Get back appetite, energy—a happy outlook on life. Every day, regularly, eat three cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast—just plain, or dissolved in a third of a glass of water—before meals, or between meals and when you go to bed.

And remember, Fleischmann's Yeast is the richest known food source of the group of three indispensable health-giving vitamins—vitamins B and G, and the remarkable "sunshine" vitamin D. These elements are often lacking in our ordinary diet.

So ask for Fleischmann's Yeast. At grocers, restaurants and soda fountains. Start eating it today!

IMPORTANT—Fleischmann's Yeast for health comes only in the foil-wrapped cake with the yellow label. It is yeast in its fresh, effective form—the kind doctors advise.

Not a "Cure-all". . Fleischmann's Yeast is a health food thousands eat —3 cakes a day

This Way To Happiness

By Maysie Greig

[illegible] Such a humiliation to [illegible]

Instead of the [illegible] unbearable [illegible] That was back [illegible] Noel helped Janice out while Marcia stayed in the car [illegible] he escorted her across [illegible] gray with a suggestion of dawn. She [illegible] the white steps, then [illegible] Her face was [illegible] The [illegible] Anything might have happened.

"Good-by, Noel," [illegible] And his voice was harsh. "I'm leaving tomorrow."

"Good-by," Janice echoed. Suddenly her eyes were clouded. She shut them tightly to crush the tears out of them. But Noel wasn't looking at her, he was staring down at his feet.

"I'm sure I've enjoyed knowing you," Janice murmured with an effort.

"So have I," Noel said bitterly. "And it's been very instructive for me, I guess. I've learnt quite a few things, thanks to you, about girls."

Janice seemed about to say something, but she didn't say it. Instead, she turned and went on through the lounge, up the stairs. Her small feet dragged, her cloak slid from her shoulders. It dragged behind her, a trail of gold on the gray carpet. She felt queerly lifeless. It was the end of everything . . . everything that mattered.

Her little scheme had succeeded beyond her wildest expectation. Was it farce or tragedy, she wondered, or that queer mixture of both which is life?

At the moment it seemed very much like tragedy . . . Came the soft buzz of the telephone bell. Her heart leapt to her throat. Could it be Noel? Noel calling up to say he hadn't [illegible] it after all? With fingers that shook pitiably she pushed the doll back [illegible] the receiver.

"Yes," she could hardly hear her own voice. So deep in her throat.

"Get home safely, sweetheart?" Kent asked over the wire. "Do you know that big [illegible] friend of yours has marred my young beauty? I've a horrible suspicion I'm going to lose two front teeth."

Janice slumped back against the wall. The receiver fell from her fingers, dangling in the air. So it was farce. Of course it was farce. You didn't lose two front teeth in a tragedy! She laughed and laughed. Kent, hearing that laughter in the room, raged, "I bet you wouldn't think it such a joke if you'd lost two front teeth, my precious!"

But no one heard him. Janice was still lying against the wall, laughing.

CHAPTER XXXI.

An Odd Surprise

NOEL did leave the next day. Janice learnt that much from the bellboy. She felt it was rather infra dig to question the bellboy, but she couldn't help it. [illegible] She also learnt the Marcia [illegible] gone too. "Good riddance to them," she thought. All the same, she didn't like the idea of them being left with Noel, though [illegible] she didn't know what it had to do with her now.

She kept saying, "It's all over and I'm glad it's all over." Although by constant repetition she could convince herself. You see, she knew in her heart she wasn't glad at all. She was desperately wretched.

"It won't be so bad when Lance comes back," she reassured herself. "Oh, I do wish he'd come. Everything will be all right then."

With Lance back she would be able to laugh at that absurd scene in the [illegible] room. [illegible] probably she would. [illegible] In Lance's kindness she would forget Noel completely. He would be a rock for her to cling to while she regained her sanity, her peace of mind. If only he would be patient with her she was sure everything would be all right.

Why didn't he come back? Why was he staying so long in Marseilles? [illegible] he had sent a [illegible] Marseilles [illegible] know what to make [illegible] Marseilles to have understood [illegible] But [illegible] She wanted to [illegible] he wanted to [illegible]

[illegible] Kent proved a broken reed [illegible] days. Though he did [illegible] a prisoner [illegible] Elsa and [illegible] seem to be taking their own time about it."

"I feel awfully guilty about [illegible]," she murmured [illegible]

"Never mind, sweetheart. They were slightly crooked anyhow. [illegible] I won't [illegible] stay [illegible] I feel it might hamper my sex appeal if it were known I had false teeth."

Yet another day. It brought a letter from Lance.

"My dear Janice," it began. "Since I am making such headway here I feel I had better stay on until the end of the week. I'm not worrying about you because I know you're finding plenty of diversion. Indeed I'm sure you're having a far better time than with me [illegible] with you. Enjoy yourself, dear, and don't worry about me. Give my love to [illegible]

"Yours, Lance."

Janice read the note through many times, but she didn't derive much comfort from it. Something about it chilled her slightly. It didn't seem to be her Lance writing. Not the one who had played with her hair, teased her, called her his little love girl.

She felt curiously lost. Although the rock she had meant to cling to was [illegible] between her very hands. "I'm letting my imagination run away with me," she told herself sternly. "Everything will be fine once I see him again."

But could she wait until the end of the week? Could she bear to live through another few days that would drag as these last had dragged? She knew she couldn't. Monte Carlo seemed dead suddenly. A city with the heart torn out. Yet there were just as many people as formerly. Just as many ways of amusing oneself.

All of a sudden Janice made up her mind. Why not take the train into Marseilles and join Lance? Surprise him, that was the idea. He'd be glad to see her, of course. Perhaps even a little touched she'd wanted to come. Besides, she couldn't help feeling that, with each day Lance and she were parted, the breach between them was widening. Well, it mustn't widen any more. She determined on that.

Only a few hours by train into Marseilles. Most of the time Janice stood in the corridor leaning out of the window, drinking in the hot full beauty of the azure coast.

Marseilles! Janice found herself almost torn to pieces by eager porters. In vain she tried to explain the only luggage she had was the zipper bag she carried in her hand. Before leaving she'd crushed in a georgette nightie, a toothbrush and a jar of face cream. Anything else she needed she could borrow from Elsa.

She took a taxi to the hotel. A gay green taxi that rattled her through the crowded streets as though it were trying to make a record run. "I hope Lance won't mind if I arrive in bits," Janice thought. "My legs are about to part company from my waist any moment."

The reception clerk told her the two ladies and the gentleman were out. Janice felt disappointed. She'd been picturing herself rushing straight into Lance's room, crying gaily, "I've come, Lance. I couldn't stay away any longer. You're glad, aren't you?"

And he'd take both her hands, draw her eagerly to him. Say with a half tender, half choked little laugh, "Glad, my little Janice? Why . . . you know I am, child!" Then she'd be in his arms, clinging tightly to him. There she'd forget the misery of the past weeks.

But the reception clerk assured her Mr. Saunders was out.

"Hang it!" thought Janice. Stupid, she told herself, to feel so flat suddenly. Lance would be in soon, surely. She settled herself down in the large glassed-in lounge, beside a table with magazines.

But the magazines were in French and she couldn't understand them. Besides, her thoughts kept wandering. Slowly, she found herself chilled by a queer sense of apprehension. Nothing tangible she could put her finger on. Nothing she could laugh out of her system. Just something that kept her uneasy, even vaguely afraid.

"You're developing nerves," she jeered at herself. "It shows what too much leisure can do for a girl!"

Presently, glancing toward the street, Janice saw Lance and Elsa approaching. She jumped to her feet. But something, she didn't know what, made her sit down again. She sat still watching them. Now that sense of apprehension was very real in her heart.

They were sauntering along the broad sunlit boulevard, arm in arm, talking and laughing. A certain intimacy in their gestures, a happy intimacy. Lance was looking happier than Janice had seen him look for weeks. She thought quickly, "That specialist must have done him a world of good." Then somehow her eyes fled to Elsa. Was it only the specialist?

They stopped at the desk for their keys. The reception clerk must have mentioned a lady was waiting to see them, for they both turned [illegible] simultaneously. Janice forced herself to her feet. She smiled and waved. Perhaps even more enthusiastically because of the strange fear that had pricked her. "All nonsense," she thought as Lance came quickly towards her. "I must be going in for [illegible]"

[illegible] hands. "Well, Janice, this is a surprise." His thin pleasant face smiled down at her. A genuine affection in his smile. Her gray eyes searched his face eagerly, hopefully. Affection, yes. But wasn't something missing? Something she used to see there before?

"Are you better, Lance?" she asked quickly.

"So much better, my dear. A new man."

She nodded slowly. "Yes, you look a new man. And different, too, somehow. There is something different about you . . . though I'm not sure what it is."

He didn't reply, but she noticed a faint color rise up under his tan. It puzzled her.

And still he was waiting to hear him say how glad he was she'd come. Instead, he asked, "Did Noel come with you?"

"No." [illegible] on the point of telling him Noel had left Monte Carlo. But she didn't know why she didn't. But afterwards how thankful she was that she hadn't!

"I just jumped on the train on an impulse," she told him. And added, "You've been gone so long, Lance. You're quite a stranger."

But instead of protesting, he merely smiled a little crookedly and said, "I think I've been [illegible] most of the time to you, [illegible] Janice?"

Her gray eyes filled with open [illegible] in their depths.

"But, Lance, [illegible]"

He squeezed her hands gently and smiled. "Never mind. Come up to our sitting room, we'll have tea."

"You won't mind if I don't join you for tea?" Elsa said, as they were all shot up in the elevator. "But, I promised to meet Olive at the bank and go shopping with her." She smiled. "I'm always afraid the store clerks will rush in a body and assassinate her if someone isn't with her!"

She left them in the corridor. "Do use my room if you want to," she urged Janice cordially. "We'll all meet at dinner, won't we?" She waved a hand gaily and was gone.

Lance stood looking after her. In a queer way Janice felt he had forgotten her entirely for the moment. The sense chilled her. She thrust her arm through his. "Come along, Lance. Where's this tea you promised me?"

CHAPTER XXXII.

Heart-Breaking Irony.

T[illegible] hotel overlooked the harbor. From their sitting room they could see the stout funnels of many ships, and a few sailing masts, thin and white in the brilliant sunlight.

Lance phoned down and ordered tea. While they waited he paced about the room asking what she'd been doing, how she'd been amusing herself. Janice couldn't help feeling he didn't listen very attentively to what she replied. And often he threw out another question before she'd answered the last.

She had thought directly she saw Lance again, immediately the breach would be healed. But now, sitting in the deep arm chair, her arms encircling her pretty silk-clad knees, watching him move restlessly about the room in curiously jerky movements, picking up a cigarette, lighting it, then throwing it aside again, she couldn't help feeling the breach was as wide as it had ever been. Even wider.

Suddenly she roused herself, tightened her arms about her knees, and asked, a little timidly, "You haven't told me you are glad to see me, Lance. Aren't you glad?"

She half expected him to laugh, come over and kiss her or

This Way To Happiness

By M[illegible] Gray

tweak her ear. Say, "What do you think, little goose dear? Can't you see I'm glad?" Or make a joke of it, saying, "Don't you see how upset I am, my love?"

But, instead, there was a tiny pause. It hurt, coming when it did. Then Lance said in a voice that, for him, was curiously stiff, "Yes, I'm glad. I've been wanting to talk to you about . . . about our marriage, my dear."

Janice felt startled. More startled somehow than there was apparent cause for feeling. She stared up at him, murmuring, "Our marriage, Lance?"

He nodded, leant against the table, crossed his feet. His face, she saw, was drawn into tight lines, his lips a little grim. "It's a hard thing to say, Janice. I suppose it always is hard to admit defeat."

Her thin body stiffened. But she didn't say anything. She just watched Lance, fearfully.

"We didn't build our marriage on a very firm foundation, did we, dear?" he asked at last. And the note in his voice was half gentle, half whimsical. "I fancy we both thought we wanted things we've since found aren't worth so much. You wanted to taste luxury. I wanted youth and gaiety. Though," he smiled crookedly, "that wasn't all I wanted. I wanted you, too. I wanted you very badly once, Janice. I don't suppose you realize how badly I did want you."

He closed his eyes momentarily. His hands clenched about the sides of the table. But, a minute later, he reopened his eyes, adding, "But one gets over these things. Especially if one has a sharp shock. It may be the more painful cure, but it's certainly the quicker one."

Janice felt her whole face burn slowly with mortification. She sensed what he was referring to. That night . . . He must have seen her sobbing in Noel's arms, heard what she said. The one thing she had dreaded. Not so much for herself, but for the hurt she knew it must have inflicted upon Lance.

But though Lance waited a moment before going on, she couldn't say anything. Her throat felt painfully tight.

"Anyhow, that's all over," he resumed presently, in a more normal voice. "And, these last days, I've been thinking out what we'd better do. . . . Why, whatever is it, child?"

Tears were streaming down Janice's cheeks. She tried, but couldn't stop them. She was crying softly, noiselessly, like a little girl cries who feels lost and bewildered.

"It's nothing to worry about, dear," he said gently. "It's just a mistake we both made. Please don't cry. You hurt me when you cry. There, wipe your eyes with my handkie. . . ."

He crossed over to her, holding out a gray silk handkerchief. Janice sniffed and wiped her eyes slowly. Lance hesitated a minute, then dropped onto the padded arm of the chair beside her. He put an arm about her shoulders. He even drew her a little towards him.

"That's better, isn't it, dear? Don't think I'm cross with you, Janice. Far from it. Things like that happen, you know, and we can't help them. But one can help going on being unhappy, can't one? That's why I'm talking now. You see, although I'm still very fond of you, I've stopped wanting to attempt the impossible. I've stopped believing you'll ever love me as you should love me if we're to make anything of our marriage. It isn't your fault. I'm sure you've tried, dear. And you were frank with me in the beginning. You told me then you didn't love me. But I, like a fool, was confident I could win you. I suppose when a man first falls in love he always is confident. . . . No, I don't think either of us is very much to blame."

There was a pause. He still held her gently against him. Now, very softly, he was stroking her hair. And, as they sat there in the silence that grew and throbbed painfully, Janice felt sick at the thought of losing this tenderness. This tenderness that was Lance's.

She felt bruised and torn. Torn between a deep fear of being parted from him, and her knowledge everything he said was true. Almost, in that moment, she did love him as he asked to be loved. Almost.

Lance went on quietly. "I suppose an older man often does become infatuated with a young girl. He falls in love with her gaiety, her vivacity, her inexperience, even. And it's quite on the cards that such a marriage may work out all right. But it holds equally true that it mayn't. Don't you think, little Janice, it's best if we face this thing squarely?"

Janice nodded. She drew a sharp breath. She plucked at the silken cord on a cushion. Her hands were white, shaking, like live creatures in pain. Everything solid she had hoped for, had sacrificed for, seemed to be sliding from her.

Yet she knew she couldn't blame Lance. And he was right, too, she supposed. But it hurt to lose him. More than she could have imagined. She felt small and afraid of the future suddenly. Like a child shut out of a warm friendly house.

She tried to speak, but her lips quivered so. She bit them angrily, trying to control them. "I'm so very fond of you, Lance."

He waited a moment, then put a hand under her chin and turned her face up to his.

"But love, my dear. You don't love me, do you?"

She shut her eyes tightly. Very tightly. She muttered, "Not in that way, Lance."

He sighed. "You see, dear . . ."

And again there was silence.

The waiter, bringing in tea, was a merciful interruption. Janice kept her back turned to the man. She sniffed again and wiped her eyes surreptitously. She felt behind her for her hand bag. She drew out her powder puff and dabbed her nose. Then she took out her little mirror and saw she had splodged it on unevenly. She made a hasty attempt to repowder it.

When the waiter had gone, Lance held out his hand to her. He smiled. "Come and pour out tea for me, dear. It may be the last time."

But that was too much for Janice. She started crying again. Then she felt Lance's arms about her, so she cried against his shoulder, whispering incoherently, "I don't want to leave you, Lance."

"Don't, please, my sweet. . . . Please don't," he begged. "You're acting as though this was tragedy. And it isn't tragedy at all. We're doing this for both our happiness."

"Both?" she whispered.

He nodded. "Both, dear. I know you're going to be happy. . . . I think, maybe, in the end, I am, too."

Janice's sobs stopped abruptly. She whispered, "Elsa?"

He nodded, adding quietly, "I should have married her years ago, Janice. I wish to heaven I had."

Janice remained very still against him. Her heart felt very cold suddenly. So that was why. At the same time, she was glad for him. Or she knew she would be glad for him presently. But she did whisper now, in a queerly choked voice, "That's fine, Lance. She's darling."

Lance smiled and smoothed her hair.

"I've been thinking about the divorce," he said presently. But he didn't look at her as he said it. He looked down into his tea cup, stirring it rather vigorously. "If it's the same with you, dear, I'll go back to the States and get one there. I believe it's fairly simple. Desertion, incompatability, no scandal. The only trouble is establishing a residence. But I hear that in Nevada, at least, a few months is sufficient." He bent across and patted her hand. "I hate these gruesome details as much as you do, dear. But you'll be happier afterwards. Of course, I'll see you have everything you want. At least," he smiled a little, "until you marry again."

Janice started. The color flooded her white cheeks, then drained again. "Why should you think I'll marry again?" she stammered.

He smiled kindly and gave her hand a light affectionate squeeze. "I'm not a fortune teller, but I've a pretty good idea you will, Janice. . . . And, when you go back to Monte Carlo, be sure and tell Noel I don't bear him any ill will, won't you?"

Janice stared down into her tea cup. She didn't say anything. She couldn't. She could hardly bear to think.

Lance did know then. At least, he knew Noel and she had loved each other. But there was something he didn't know. . . . What had happened that night at the masked ball. How she had driven Noel from her, disgusted. How she had killed his love outright, because she had thought it was the only thing to do.

And, suddenly, she realized Lance must never know that. Not now when he had admitted caring for Elsa. If he knew he might refuse to go through with the divorce. He would feel chivalrously bound to stick by her.

She swallowed a quick gulp of tea, murmuring, "I'll tell Noel, Lance."

"Will you go back tonight, or come with us in the car tomorrow?" he asked.

"I'll go back tonight. To do my packing and everything," she said quickly.

She felt feverish to escape. To get away by herself, to try and think it all out. Besides, though she bore Elsa no ill will in the world, she didn't want to meet her again today. Lance had assured her this wasn't tragedy. All the same, she couldn't feel it quite comedy either. She was losing something very precious. Something sweet and tender which, she doubted, she would find in life again.

She thought, "I should have realized this before." Yet knew she always had realized it. She had appreciated it, too. It had warmed her and made her happy. But it wasn't strong enough. That other love had swept her off her feet, engulfed her, tossed her on to golden heights of bliss, flung her onto the black rocks of despair.

Lance took her down to the train. Before she climbed into the car he put an arm about her and said, unsteadily, "If I thought you were going to worry, dear, I wouldn't let you go back tonight."

She shook her head, achieved a tired smile. "I won't worry, Lance."

"Anyhow, we'll meet again tomorrow evening. We can discuss everything we haven't discussed then."

She nodded. "Yes, Lance."

But he still felt worried about her. She had taken it harder than he had dreamed she would. He'd thought she'd be relieved, glad of the knowledge that soon she would be free to go to Noel. But something in her attitude puzzled him. He was touched and perplexed.

He said, hesitantly, "Hadn't you better wire Noel to meet you?"

She shook her head quickly, "Oh no, I can phone him when I get back to the hotel."

The train was about to start. He kissed her hastily. "Thank heavens we don't bear each other any ill will, dear. That's more than a lot of husbands and wives about to break up can [illegible], isn't it?"

He did feel thankful for that. He thought about it as he watched the long train curl like a centipede out of sight. "But she'll cheer up when she sees Noel again. After all, it's for her ultimate happiness."

I can certainly smile Now! and my Gums are so Firm!

thanks to Ipana!

1. I found "pink" on my toothbrush!

I used to be so ashamed of my teeth that I wouldn't smile! They looked terrible. One day our office manager asked me about my gums. She said the foods we eat today let the gums become flabby, and caused them to bleed. "I used to have 'pink tooth brush' myself," she said. "I finally had gingivitis. And my teeth were as gray as dust!"

2. I started with Ipana and massage.

She said she hardened her gums with Ipana Tooth Paste and massage. You rub a little extra Ipana into your gums every time you clean your teeth. I got some Ipana. The druggist explained to me that there is ziratol in Ipana. It helps harden the gums. I've been massaging Ipana into my gums ever since—and I wish you'd see the difference in them!

Now I'm not ashamed to smile! Men don't actually come out and say, "What beautiful teeth you have, Dorothy"—but I notice they seem to approve of me when I smile! My gums are firm. And my teeth look wonderful. I don't have "pink tooth brush" any more. Remember: A good tooth paste, like a good dentist, is never a luxury!

[illegible] What had I got to show for it? What [illegible] the boys was Steve's keeping part of my share for me, which they figured was giving him an extra share for himself. Well, why not? He was the boss of the gang.

The first [illegible] that I was of [illegible] there was an argument that showed where the brains lay. Steve said that my job was only to sit in the car, keep my eyes open and signal the [illegible] as they stepped out after the stick-up. If a cop should come along and [illegible] I was to just look dumb and say that my gentlemen friends had stepped into a speakeasy for a drink.

The other boys wanted me to signal the approach of a cop or of a crowd of three or four men, which is something about as bad, by tooting the horn in a certain way.

[illegible] for warning [illegible] Steve didn't like [illegible]

W[illegible] were out [illegible] working all [illegible] road [illegible] to listen to whistle signals. And if we did, what could we do about it?

W[illegible] settled down to the strange [illegible] I kept a lookout [illegible] They would be [illegible] books [illegible] The boys would [illegible] get in and drive to the next place to be raided or home.

If a cop was talking to me or some men might be trouble [illegible] the car, which was always open, or got out and stood beside it. The boys would then walk rapidly around the [illegible] seat [illegible] slowly [illegible] till they [illegible] off again.

If anything went wrong inside and they had to make a hot-foot getaway with a crowd after them, they paid no attention to me or the car. I simply waited till the excitement died down, abandoned the car and took a taxi home. That car, of course, was not ours. If a book can't manage to have a permanent home or more personal property than he can run with to a taxi, he naturally can't own a car.

Until a few years ago all cars used in crime were stolen. For an out-of-town job or a long trip stealing a car and changing the number plates is still the best and cheapest method, but for short town jobs it has disadvantages. Steve was an expert car thief, who boasted that he could beat any [illegible]king device on the market, but he never knew how soon the loss might be discovered and every patrolman in the city warned to look for it.

We always had a few sets of spare license plates, but switching numbers is a job that has to be done out of sight in a garage, and a crooked one at that, and lots of garages are honest. To save all this trouble and risk Steve patronized the concerns that rent cars to anyone who can show a driver's license and references.

I don't know anything easier to get or that means less than references. Steve had a pocketful of them and another pocketful of drivers' licenses, which most law-abiding car owners keep in the pocket of the left front door, handy for us to find. He threw away the ones that did not fit the description of any of us. If a cop got leery-eyed at one of these rented cars, I told him the truth and showed him the deposit receipt of the concern.

When we had to abandon a car we didn't do further business with that particular concern, or else sent another member of the gang to rent it next time.

This is the way the boys used to "take a speakie," and it had to be done just right or most anything might happen. But if the proper technique was observed Steve used to say that it was safe enough except for just one possibility, which he always dreaded: the unexpected presence of another mob there for the same purpose.

We never started out before 12:30 A. M., because most speakeasies change bartenders between midnight and 2 in the morning. All the receipts for the afternoon and evening are in the till, ready to be counted when the bartenders change shifts. The oncoming bartender counts up the cash that's in the till and checks up on the cash register, and the money is all there, just waiting to be grabbed.

Then, too, the high-class speakeasies get their best play after the theatre. Men and couples come in after seeing a show, buy a few drinks, maybe have a bite to eat, sit around talking, and these are the people with money, not the usual "hangers-on" that every speakeasy has.

Saturday night, being pay night for most people, is also a very good night to stick up a place, and it is easy work on a Saturday night because by midnight or a little later most everyone is pretty drunk and helpless. The only danger is that the crowd might be so large that they are hard to handle. But even at 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning they have plenty of money left in their pockets and the cash register is generally crammed.

Sunday night is also a pretty good night. The [illegible] has plenty of customers, but they are not so well heeled as on the previous two nights. Most of them [illegible] from Sunday night to early Monday morning the bartender [illegible] It is very easy to get into the speakeasies then and a cinch to stick them up, but the profits are not what they are Friday and Saturday nights.

As [illegible] before, Monday night is a total loss. There is no business in the speakeasies. Everybody is recovering from the late hours and heavy drinking of the previous two or three nights, there is little money in the cash drawer, the bartender is half [illegible] and the stick-up men are taking their night off.

Steve's pet night was Friday. He said that a lot of busy business men, with money in their pockets, don't bother to go to the office for a half day on Saturday and start celebrating the week-end Friday night. He used to prove that there was something in this idea by making some of his best hauls on Friday.

It requires a few formalities to get into a high-class speakeasy, and we seldom wasted our valuable time on any other kind. If a party of well-dressed gentlemen are refused admission to a strange speakeasy they need not feel insulted. The man at the peephole does not suspect them of being Smedleys (Federal evidence collectors). He is afraid they are swell mob men who will "stick up" the place.

There is nothing more useful than a poolroom for locating a swell speakeasy and providing the necessary introduction. Our boys would enter a strange poolroom and begin playing, knowing that there were certain to be loungers there with a thirst, but no job to support it. These kibitzers would watch the three well-dressed, good-looking youths and presently see them go into a huddle, arguing about something. Their voices would grow louder and finally Steve would be heard protesting:

"No, I won't take a chance over here. Some of these Manhattan dumps are terrible. Wait till we get back to Brooklyn tonight, where we can get good stuff."

Here was a chance for one of the kibitzers to render a service to these prosperous looking strangers, to be rewarded by a few drinks. The boys would accept guidance, but insist that the place must be the best, no matter what they charged. They would be led to the most expensive one in the vicinity and introduced. Having looked the place over, they would return some morning at 12:30 and get in on the strength of claiming to know Adolf, the bald-headed day bartender, or some other person whom they had cultivated on the first visit.

They wore no disguises or masks, but they left their felt hats in the car and wore caps. I will tell you later the fatal results of wearing derbies. Freddy and "Handsome Harold" used also to swap overcoats just before they went in. A big criminal lawyer had suggested the idea to make the testimony of eye-witnesses seem cock-eyed. If they testified that Freddy wore a dark overcoat and "Handsome" a light one, it would be easy to prove that the ones they owned were just the reverse. If they were so wrong on one thing, probably they were wrong on their whole identification. It does not take much to confuse a jury. Steve, however, didn't bother.

After they got in Freddy and "Handsome" would be talking at one end of the bar, at the end closest to the tables, which are usually scattered round the room beside the bar, and, if possible, closest to the back wall. Steve would gradually drift away from his two pals and edge along the bar until he got the bartender in confidential conversation at the other end. "Handsome" and Freddy would keep an eye on Steve.

When he gave the signal with his eyebrows they would all go into action at once. Steve would suddenly pull his gun and cover the bartender and either back him up behind the bar to the cash register or if the cash register happened to be at the other end of the bar, he would leap over the bar, with the bartender covered, and then back him down to the cash register. Steve always took care of the cash register and the bartender.

In the meantime the other two boys had pulled their guns and covered all the customers. One would take those lined up at the bar and the others those sitting at the tables. They would back them all up against the wall, with their faces to the wall. Then while Freddy kept them covered "Handsome" would go through them. Money was what they were after. Small jewelry, unless it was actually diamonds or real gold watches, was not interesting.

After going through the till and taking from the bartender whatever he happened to have in his pocket, Steve would back him around and he would join the line against the wall. Then Steve would make a hurried search through the drawers of the back bar. Usually in the drawer under the cash register would be found a gun. Sometimes the speakeasy gun would be lying on the shelf under the front bar, but the gun did the bartender no good. When he was told to put his hands up in the air, he put them there. If they didn't go high enough Steve would [illegible] for the ceiling.

Every speakeasy has a gun some place, but generally where the bartender can get at it quickest. Steve did not look for the gun because he wanted to steal it, for he had plenty of guns of his own. But he wanted to unload it so that nobody would be shooting at him in the getaway.

Some of the other drawers in the back bar might reveal a few valuables, such as certain sums of money laid there to pay off certain bills, the beer man, or the whiskey man, or the cigar man.

Speakeasies, especially those which have been made from the old-time saloon, are always in fear of hold-ups. Sometimes they don't keep more than change for a $20 bill in the cash register, but they always have money on hand. They have to have a good deal of cash on hand in case of raids, to pay off the bootleggers who supply them with beer and whiskey, generally altogether different men, and money to meet the weekly or monthly bills of the iceman, the laundryman, the cigar and cigarette man, the gas man, etc. Also, if a dry agent or a plain-clothes man walks in with an itching palm there is always money somewhere to save the expense of a raid, hiring a lawyer and fighting the court case.

Steve, of course, knew this. It was not always easy to find this hidden supply in the few minutes' time of a stick-up, but there are two or three favorite places where the speakeasy owners keep this reserve money. The favorite one is an empty cigar box at the bottom of a pile of four or five boxes of cigars. So Steve carefully opened every cigar box, and three times out of five the bottom box would hold a few hundred dollars which the speakeasy was keeping for such emergencies.

Another popular hiding place was a marked paper board "container." A container is a quart or two-quart round cardboard vessel with a cardboard top in which beer is sent out. In the old days when a person "rushed the can" he brought a tin pail or a pitcher to the saloon and had it filled with beer. Nowadays the speakeasy keeps these one and two-quart containers for the customer if he wants to take out a few quarts of beer. The bartender fills the container, jabs a few holes through the top with an ice-pick, so that the gas will escape, wraps it up in a sack or newspaper and the customer walks out with it.

These containers are kept in piles either on top of the back bar or in one of the cabinets underneath the back bar. Some "wise" speakeasy keepers have a container at the bottom of the stack with a peculiar mark on it, so that his partner or bartender will know it and will not fill it with beer. Steve knew this and would knock over or kick over this pile of containers, and in a few seconds turn them all upside down. Out of one of them would many times drop a nice fat roll of bills.

Other bars have secret chambers in which the bankroll is kept and these are sometimes impossible to find in a short visit. Steve would often come out saying, "I know d—— well there was a bankroll sunk around there some place, but I couldn't put my hands on it. We'll go back some other night."

This going back stuff, though, wasn't so hot. The proprietor or a bartender might forget the face of a customer who had spent fifty bucks in his place last week, but never in his lifetime is he going to forget the face of a man who stuck a "cannon" in his own face. It proved almost impossible to get back in unless we heard on the outside that there had been a change of bartenders or a change of ownership, and then if a new man took hold of the place he would probably pick out a new hiding place.

I often read in the papers of tea stores, chain stores, shoe stores and other places being stuck up three or four times in a few months, but I never heard of a speakeasy being stuck up by the same gang more than once.

Was Getting Bald Fast

Read How He Saved His Hair

Here is a true story written by Mr. C. D. H. (name on request), 1121S Buckeye Rd., Cleveland, Ohio. It will help those who are becoming bald or who have scalp itch and dandruff.

"Let me tell you a story so that others who are suffering with dandruff, itching scalp or falling hair may benefit by my experience.

"About three years ago I contracted dandruff. My head was literally covered with it. Sometimes I could not sleep on account of it, it was so stubborn. It tormented me exceedingly and made me simply miserable and downhearted.

"Altho' I tried all kinds of hair tonics and remedies I got no relief whatsoever, no results. My head still itched, I still had dandruff and I began gradually to lose my hair. I spent quite an amount of money on those unhelpful remedies and tonics.

"Then, about three months ago, I read your advertisement in an old magazine I found lying around the house. I read this advertisement hopefully, then decided to try Japanese Oil, put it on trial, so to speak. If it helped others, gave them relief results, I thought it surely would give me relief, too, free me from my miserable predicament.

"I gave it three months' trial. Results: I have no more dandruff, it is all gone. My scalp no longer itches and my hair has stopped falling out.

"Thank God, what a relief, all on account of this marvelous remedy of yours—Japanese Oil.

"Those who are victims of dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair will be the wiser by giving Japanese Oil a fair trial. I recommend it."

The Truth About SAVING HAIR

Facts You Should Know!

Like using soap in washing your body, all that any shampoo is intended for is to cleanse the scalp and hair. But you can't wash away underlying causes that allow the hair to fall or thin out, that threaten baldness, that make the hair too dry or too oily, that produce dandruff, scales and consequent itching of the scalp.

For these conditions and destroying deep-seated germs which may be living on the scalp, you need the one medicinal preparation which you know by reputation does extraordinary things for the scalp and hair —

GLOVER'S

Glover's Mange Medicine, used in combination with Glover's Medicated Soap and Glover's System of Massage, is the most complete and effective treatment known to science.

Don't experiment with doubtful methods any longer. Start immediately to save your hair and retard its graying by getting Glover's at your druggist's today. Or have your Barber or Beauty Shop give you this famous treatment.

You can tell Glover's (Sarcoptic) Mange Medicine from imitations of it, by its pungent pine tar odor. To leave out this valuable ingredient which gives Glover's its clean breath of the pine forests would rob it of its effectiveness. Therefore be sure you get the genuine Glover's.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Kent to the Rescue.

IT was already dark when Janice got back to the Hotel de Paris. As she switched on the light and looked around she shivered. The little sitting room seemed strangely empty. Emptier than it had ever seemed.

Wearily she sank down onto the chaise longue, loosening the gray fox fur at her throat. It slipped onto the gray carpet and lay, like a tired dog, at her feet.

Lance and she were through. And, ironically, it was Lance himself who had wanted to end it. He had said, "I suppose an older man often does become infatuated with a young girl . . ."

She shut her eyes quickly. Somehow that hurt. Had the impulse that had urged him into marriage been merely infatuation? Was what he felt for Elsa deeper, saner? Perhaps. They would have so much more in common, many more mutual interests. Lance and she had so little in common. Not even youth.

Yet in the short span of their oddly assorted partnership they had grown fond of each other. But it wasn't love. And Janice knew it wasn't. All her love was given to Noel. Noel who was out of her life, too. Queer, wasn't it?

"If only this had happened a little sooner," she thought, a sharp surge of bitterness welling up in her. Desperately she tried to crush it down. It didn't help to feel bitter.

With a little wriggle she twisted herself deeper into the chaise longue, pressing her hot face against a cool taffeta cushion. She knew she was crying again, and was furious with herself. But she was wretchedly lonely.

She heard the telephone ring. She sat up with a start, reached for the receiver, knocking over the Lence doll that covered it. It lay on the floor, one leg over it's head, in a comic, forlorn attitude. Janice smiled wryly. She felt it bore some resemblance to herself.

"Yes?" .

"That you, sweetheart?" came Kent's husky, cheerful voice. "Been trying to get you all afternoon. How's everything? All roses in the garden, my pet?"

Janice gave a tight laugh. There was heartbreak in it.

"The roses are wonderful. Life's full of roses, isn't it, Kent?"

He said: "What the deuce is the matter with you?"

"Nothing." Janice laughed again. "I'm just enjoying life."

"You sound as if you were going through a merry little course of torture," he told her.

"Nonsense." She choked back a sob. "I'm fine, I'm dandy, I'm bubbling over with happiness."

"Look here, are you alone, kid?"

"Oh, quite alone by the telephone and all that sort of thing. That's why I'm glad to hear your cheering voice. How are the teeth, Kent?"

"Oh, blast the teeth. I've got a plate in, if you want to know, and it's hurting like blazes. All the same, I'm coming round to see you right away."

"Oh, don't, Kent," quick alarm in her voice. "I'm not up to seeing anyone tonight."

"You were crying when I rang up, weren't you?" he accused. "I could tell by your voice. I don't know what it's all about, but I'm coming round now. And if you lock me out I'll kick up such a shindy that your reputation will be shattered to shreds!"

With that Kent hung up on her. Janice replaced the receiver. She lay there thinking about it. Queer how Kent kept bobbing in and out of her life. Once she thought he had broken her heart, but now that seemed hard to credit. Absurd to imagine taking him so seriously. She wondered if it wasn't a natural and rather fatal failing always to take yourself and the other person too seriously when you're in love. If you didn't, mightn't a lot of heartbreak be avoided? If she hadn't taken herself and Noel so seriously she would never have sent him from her in disgust. A little humor might have saved the day for them.

On the whole, she decided she was glad Kent was coming. Anything was better than lying here moping. And, as Kent himself had once pointed out, if he were a cad, certainly he was a cheerful cad. Which was something.

Kent arrived a little later. He looked rather handsome in his dinner jacket. He was so blond. He came across to her, gripped both her hands, and said, sinking down onto the chaise longue beside her, "Now tell Uncle Kent all about it, darling."

"I can imagine you in many guises, Kent, but not in that of an uncle." Janice smiled. "At least, not until twenty years have gone by. Then I bet all your nieces will be young and vivacious, with peroxide hair and too much lipstick. They won't bear much family resemblance, either."

Kent threw back his head and laughed. He sank down onto his elbow. "Where have you been all day, Janice darling?"

Janice averted her face. "I went into Marseilles to see Lance." She tried to speak casually, but her voice was strained.

Kent whistled. He took a cigarette from his case and thrust one between her fingers. "Do smoke, sweetheart. It will make you less nervous. What happened?"

"Why should anything out of the ordinary have happened?" Janice asked sharply.

"Reason number one, because you've been crying. Reason number two, because you look like nothing human at the moment. Bright little boy, aren't I, my pet?"

Janice's lips twisted bitterly. "Too bright, but that always was your fault, Kent."

"Now don't take it out on me, darling," he protested. "I didn't do whatever is worrying you. Where's our friend the matinee idol? The dear old chap who smashed me one in the jaw? If you hadn't made me pretend to be tight I'd have biffed him one back good and proper."

Janice laughed. But it was sorry laughter. "Noel's gone. He left the next day."

"Well, what could you expect?" he demurred. "I told you he was too full of ideals. He's probably made straight for a monastery. I can just see him walking up and down the jolly old cloisters with shaven pate, wearing a cassock, or whatever it is they do wear, looking too handsome for words while he mutters eternal damnation upon women! If you want to see him again you'd better hurry, darling, and smile at him through the grill before he takes the final vow."

Janice smiled cryptically. "I don't think even that would be so hard to bear as knowing he's gone off to Paris with Miss Wanda Maitland and Mama."

"Puss, puss," teased Kent. "But I don't blame you, sweetheart. I think she's a pretty nasty bit of work, if you ask me. But you must admit you practically threw him into her arms."

Janice sighed. "I know I did. You see, I thought I was making a grand gesture. But as it turns out, it was a foolish gesture. Quite wasted, too." She laughed bitterly, adding, "Light my cigarette again, will you, Kent? It's gone out."

Kent bent forward and gave her a light. "Noble gestures usually do land one in the soup, darling. At least, that's what I've discovered. Not," he amended modestly, "that I've tried it so often! But how, my precious, how did this particular one go wrong? I do think you might tell me. After all, I'm in it to the extent of two teeth, as it were."

Janice hesitated. Should she tell Kent? Then she shrugged. Why not? He'd be bound to know soon.

"Lance wants a divorce," she said quietly.

"What?" Kent sprang up, as though he'd been shot. He stood, blinking down at her, the cigarette hanging loosely between his fingers. "He wants a divorce? But you stagger me. It's against all the best traditions. For the young girl to want the divorce is au fait. But for the older man to . . . My child, rejoice. The dear old chap has managed to give life an original twist."

Janice stretched up a thin hand and touched his arm. "Please don't rag, Kent. It's serious, you know."

"Sorry, sweetheart." Kent dropped down beside her again. "Please go on."

Janice gave him a brief outline of the interview. Kent whistled low when she'd finished. And he sat for a few minutes contemplating the burning end of his cigarette.

"Well, if that doesn't take the bow-wow's biscuit! As I said before . . . But, take heart, sweet, I'll spare you from hearing it again. Anyhow, it's the dizzy, isn't it? So our noble effort in dramatics was wasted. Worse than wasted. And your esteemed husband, Mr. Saunders, thinks you've rushed straight back into the arms of your true love, I take it?"

Janice leant back among the mauve taffeta cushions. She achieved a twisted smile. "That's about it, Kent."

"Meanwhile yon juvenile lead has gone scuttling back to Paris with the villainess, eh? My dear, the plot grows complicated."

"Too complicated," Janice sighed. "And . . . rather wretched, Kent."

For a moment he ceased smiling. He patted her hand. "Cheer up, darling. Please cheer up." There was genuine concern in his voice, and his eyes were serious.

Janice said unsteadily, "If you're too nice to me, Kent, I'll start crying again."

"Darling, I'm always nice to you, aren't I? Look here, my beautiful, I'll put the good old brain to work and we'll devise some means of outwitting yon blonde slinky seductress yet."

Janice gave a little chortle. "Oh, Kent, I almost love you when you call her names like that. Aren't I a cat though?"

"Thank heaven for that! A girl who wasn't a cat on occasion would be too perfect for anything but a stained glass window. You always were a human little devil. That's why I liked you."

Janice grimaced. "I'm glad someone likes me at the moment. I had a feeling my stock stood rather low. Noel is disgusted with me. Lance is fond of me but would like to get rid of me. While you . . ." She broke off, glancing up at him quizzically.

Then a queer thing happened. Kent bent forward suddenly, gripping her wrists. He said, in a low quiet voice, "I love you, darling."

Janice stared up at him, her gray eyes wide with surprise. A different Kent, this. A stranger to the laughing, cynical Kent she'd known down here. A stranger too, to the Kent she'd known nearly two years ago. She felt so confounded she didn't know what to say. He said again in that same curiously different voice, "I love you, Janice . . ."

"But, Kent, you can't be serious," she stammered. "I did love you once but you killed my love."

He smiled twistedly. "You see, Janice, I didn't really love you then. Not you. I only loved a pretty vivacious young girl. And there are lots of pretty vivacious young girls in the world."

"I see," Janice said slowly. She added, "I don't understand you, Kent."

He smiled grimly, and looked down at his cigarette. "Perhaps I don't understand myself, Janice."

There was a pause.

Then Kent raised one eyebrow. "No hope, eh, sweetheart?"

Janice shook her head slowly.

He sighed. "Oh, well, I've got it out of my system, and no harm done, eh, precious?" He smiled mockingly. "Now, after that bright interlude, I'll put on the old thinking cap again. But of course," he clicked his fingers twice, "I have it. We must follow them, darling, in my fast moving rattle-trap. We must have a little chat with the worthy Henderson before friend Wanda has time to get in the dirty work. We must leave in the morning."

"But," Janice gasped, "how can we, Kent? Besides, I couldn't possibly explain about that night. And he mightn't believe me."

"Then I'll do the explaining, sweet. Yes, even at the risk of another two good teeth. I'll say to him, 'If you must strike me, Sir Knight, for Pete's sake strike again where you struck before. They're false.'"

Janice burst out laughing. She couldn't help it.

"I'll say this for you, Kent, you do make me laugh."

He asked quickly, "Isn't that half the battle, sweetheart?"

But she wasn't listening. She was thinking over what he had said. Could she possibly go after Noel to Paris? Wouldn't it look as though she were throwing herself at his head? Yet he had said he loved her. Not once but several times. And he had said it with his deep blue eyes every time he looked at her . . . until that night of the dance. Dared she? Yet so much was at stake. Everything! Besides, she didn't really want to be here when Lance, Elsa and Olive Devorn arrived tomorrow. For one thing, the atmosphere might be strained. For another, they might find out the truth about Noel. No, better were she gone. She could meet Lance later in Paris or London.

"I'll come," she said suddenly. She added, "It's dear of you, Kent."

"Bosh," he laughed. "I should say it was up to me to do a good action once in a while!"

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Wanda Breaks the News.

THEY left at six-thirty the following morning. Janice had been up most of the night packing. When she told Kent he asked in alarm, "Great Heavens, you're not bringing it all with you?"

She laughed. "Only one suitcase. The rest can be sent after me."

She left a note for Lance. It had taken her a long time composing it. She felt the least she said the better. She didn't want to explain anything. So, in the end, she merely wrote a friendly little letter saying she was motoring to Paris, and would see him later there or in London.

Kent's car was a long low racing model, cream bodied with scarlet fenders. It shot like a white arrow down the sunlit highways.

"You're not competing for the Grand Prix, you know," Janice reminded him, as the car took a corner on only two wheels.

Kent merely laughed. Like most good drivers, he was a fast driver. The speedometer kept around sixty.

"We can't have this little trip another anti-climax, eh?" Kent remarked, grinning sideways at her. "Not like our last effort, my dear."

"I only know how to get in touch with Noel through a travel agency," she told him. "That will take days."

Kent winked. "Don't worry, darling. I did a little sleuthing after I left you last night. I found out that the Maitland Henderson mail is to be sent to the Grand Hotel. How's that?"

"Fine," murmured Janice. Though it disturbed her considerably to know their letters were to be sent to the same address. "They're certainly keeping a close watch over him," she thought, "although maybe he's keeping a close watch over them."

Yet she couldn't quite believe that. Not so soon after that scene on the raft. After those few moments in the ballroom at Nice, when he had stared down at her and said in a quiet voice that was almost a whisper, "Only this . . . I love you, Janice." Surely, however disgusted he was with her, he couldn't have turned to Wanda quite yet.

They spent the night at the Hotel de France in Bourg. A delightful hotel with a pleasant white facade and gaily flowered window boxes. The food was delicious, but Janice merely toyed with her dinner. The nearer they drew to Paris the more distrait she became.

Cream Puff Sundaes.

PREPARE cream puffs and when cold fill with vanilla ice cream and pour over hot fudge sauce.

Sour Cream Ice Cream.

Caramel Sauce.

PUT 1 cup light brown sugar, ½ cup granulated sugar, ⅛ teaspoon salt and ½ cup corn sirup over fire. Bring to boiling point. Cook until mixture reaches 241 degrees on sugar thermometer or forms a soft ball when tested in cold water. Cool slightly and stir in 1 cup of thin cream.

Caramel Marshmallow Delight.

TO hot caramel sauce add a few sliced marshmallows. Then cool slightly and add cream. Serve on ice cream or cake.

Favorite Sundae.

BREAK ½ pound milk chocolate into top of double boiler. Place over hot water. Add ½ cup scalded milk and stir until smooth and creamy. Pour this sauce over ice cream and sprinkle with chopped freshly salted almonds or peanuts.

Custard Ice Cream.

SCALD 3 cups milk. Beat 3 egg yolks with 1½ cups sugar and ¼ teaspoon salt. Add the scalded milk gradually. Return to top of double boiler and cook over hot water until creamy and smooth, stirring constantly to prevent lumping. Add 3 stiffly beaten egg whites. Chill and add 1 cup thick cream, plain or beaten and ½ tablespoon favorite flavoring. Freeze.

Strawberry Sundae.

PLACE a slice of cake or a cup cake on a serving of ice cream. Pour strawberry sauce over the cake and cream and garnish with whipped cream. To make the sauce: Wash, hull and strain ripe strawberries. To each cup of the strained pulp add ½ cup sugar and let stand on back of stove until sugar is dissolved. Other berries may be substituted for strawberries.

Caramel Delight.

PUT vanilla ice cream between and on top of 2 rectangular slices of sponge cake. Cover with caramel sauce and sprinkle with toasted almonds.

Ice Cream Pie.

LINE a large pie pan with flaky pastry. Bake in a quick oven. Cool, fill with hard ice cream, spread with favorite jelly and cover with thick meringue, made with 2 egg whites to ¼ cup sugar. Brown in hot oven and serve immediately.

Peppermint Candy Sundae.

TO Philadelphia ice cream (when it is half frozen) add ½ cup each chopped raisins, pecan meats, shredded blanched almonds and crushed peppermint stick candy. Finish freezing. Garnish with whipped cream colored to represent stick candy. This is done by dipping a fork first in red vegetable coloring and then drawing lightly through the whipped cream.

Cherry Sherbet.

PRESS 1 pint can red (sour) cherries through fruit press. Soak 2 teaspoons gelatin in ½ cup cold cherry juice. Bring the remaining cherry pulp and juice to the boiling point and pour over the softened gelatin. Add ½ cup sugar and enough coloring to give red color. Freeze as usual. Double the recipe if you wish. Serve as garnish with white vanilla ice cream, green peppermint ice cream or green pistachio ice cream.

Pineapple Sundae.

BOIL the juice from 1 can crushed pineapple until it is reduced by about one-half. Cool, add the pineapple and a few drops of lemon juice.

● A word to those who are starting housekeeping. When you buy sheets, be sure to get them long enough.

Now it's so easy to buy genuine long sheets, too. Just ask for Mohawk Triple Six sheets. Do not depend on sheet labels that show only the "torn size before hemming." Remember that after laundering the actual end-to-end length will be from 8 to 10 inches less. Look for the Triple Six label on every sheet. It is a guarantee of correct length for correct bed-making.

been cleared away, she rested her elbows on the table and asked diffidently, "Don't you think I'll look an awful dumbbell rushing after Noel like this, Kent?"

Kent smiled. "Isn't it better to risk looking a fool than to spend the rest of your life feeling miserable?"

Janice crumbled some bread. "I suppose so." But her voice was still hesitant.

He bent forward and covered her hand with his. "You're quite sure he is the one and only, eh, darling?"

Her eyes fell. Her long dark lashes made a faint shadow on her white cheeks. "Quite sure, Kent."

Kent appeared to consider that while he frowned. "You don't mind my saying he hasn't much sense of humor, sweetheart?"

Janice smiled, slightly. "I know. That's one of the things that first made me love him. So easy to score off him. And he looked so adorably boyish and bewildered when I did it, too."

Kent shrugged. "Women have queer reasons for loving men!"

Janice's lips twisted. "I guess they have. Sometimes I think it's a person's queer little mannerisms that make you love them most. The way they rub a hand over their hair, or laugh, or get annoyed over stupid little things. I don't think you ever fall in love with the qualities you should fall in love with. Nobility of soul, honesty, brain power . . ."

"Thank goodness for that," Kent breathed fervently. "I'd have a pretty thin time of it, wouldn't I, angel?"

Janice laughed. "Lately you've been behaving so virtuously I'm getting quite worried about you."

"That's always a failing which can be overcome," Kent pointed out quickly.

They made Paris a few minutes after eight the next evening. Paris already shrouded in darkness with electric signs standing high on buildings like jeweled tiaras in a woman's dark hair.

"We'll make straight for the hotel," Kent suggested. "We can dine there whatever happens. No reason either why you shouldn't stay there." He grinned. "Just as well to camp on the enemy's home front!"

Janice laughed. But it was tight laughter. Really, she was taut with nervousness. She had an awful sinking feeling inside her. A dread of actually getting to the hotel. What would Noel say when he saw her? And how could she ever explain?

Kent inquired casually for Mr. Henderson at the desk. After some minutes he ascertained Noel was in at dinner. Apparently something in the nature of a dinner party was in progress. "We'll go in and beard him," Kent laughed to Janice. "The dining room is public. We'll take a table near by and get the low-down on this dinner party."

They had a cocktail. She felt she needed something to prepare her for the ordeal of going into the dining room and facing Noel. But wouldn't he be glad to see her? Oh, surely, surely. Especially when she explained that mad scene in the supper room the other night had been only pretence. That Lance himself wanted to be free. That, presently, there would be nothing in the world to prevent them taking their happiness . . Her cheeks colored, queer little tremors shot through her.

"Come along in, Kent," she laughed shakily; "anything would be better than this suspense!"

Janice saw Noel the moment she entered the dining room. She stood queerly still for a moment, looking at him. He looked so wonderful, somehow. So much more wonderful than any other man in the room. He was sitting beside Wanda Maitland. There were several people at the table.

She noticed, vaguely, the table was laden with flowers. Several bottles of champagne stood slantwise in their silver buckets of ice. The whole party had rather a festive air, though Noel himself didn't look particularly festive.

Kent put a hand on her arm and urged her forward in the wake of the head waiter. Twisting in and out amongst the tables they passed close to the table where Noel sat.

He glanced up and saw them. He stared a moment as though he couldn't credit his eyes. A hot color fled to his temples.

Then, impulsively, he sprang to his feet. He came towards them. "Janice!" A queer note in his voice. "Why are you here?" A queer light in his eyes, too, as he looked down at her. He looked at no one but her. Except for one thunder glance at Kent, he ignored him.

Janice was looking up at him. She laid a white hand on his arm. Her whole heart was in the smile in her eyes. "We've come . . . I mean I've come . . ." she began, but she got no further. Wanda had slipped from her place at the table. Now she stood by them, her arm thrust through Noel's.

"How jolly to see you here tonight, Mrs. Saunders," she interrupted Janice with a tight smile. "Quite a reunion, isn't it? You must come over and join us afterwards, drink our health. Noel and I are engaged to be married."

Janice drew back sharply. As though Wanda had struck her a fierce blow between the eyes. For the moment she wasn't quite mistress of herself.

And, in that moment, Kent stepped in. His hand closed tightly about Janice's arm. He said with a light laugh, "Well, well, who would have thought it! Sudden, isn't it? I should say rather sudden." While his steady pressure urged, "Buck up, old kid. Buck up, Janice. Get through it, somehow!"

"Oh, not so very sudden, Mr. Wilburn," Wanda smiled sweetly. "Noel and I have been good pals for some time, you know. But . . . . . isn't this rather sudden? Your visit with Mrs. Saunders to Paris?" She turned to Janice, adding, "Is your husband here, too?"

For a moment Janice didn't reply. Then a mad mood took possession of her. Why should she care what she said, what they thought? Noel was lost to her. Everything that mattered was lost with him. She threw back her head and smiled straight into Wanda's amber narrowed eyes. "No, he isn't here with me. Lance and I have separated, Miss Maitland."

"Janice . . . is that true? Do you know what you're saying?" It was Noel's agonized voice. He stared wildly down at her. He had a hard time to prevent himself gripping her shoulders, shaking her sharply.

"But of course," she gave a light laugh, adding, "why else should I be here in Paris with Kent?"

She bowed to them both, passing quickly on. The head waiter was still standing holding her chair for her. The whole interlude had occupied only a few minutes.

The Dude Ranch Mystery

By Mark Plum

yet darker blue than were Charlie Squires'. Probably that was the effect of the heavy black lashes around them. It was funny how black his eyelashes and eyebrows were when his hair was such a light brown. The same sun that had burned his face to its deep color might have bleached his hair to that odd, streaked taffy shade. She recalled the clean, flat line of his cheeks, the square set of his jaw. Was that the face of a murderer? Of a coward who waited in ambush and killed from behind? Idly, her mind compared his lean, controlled features with the handsome, over-fullness of Charlie Squires' face. If the facts had not been so overwhelmingly against Pete, she thought that it would be far easier to suspect Charlie of the villainy.

Sally caught herself up disgustedly. She was as bad as the procrastinating sheriff. Why should she dwell on Pete Black's features or contrast them advantageously with any other man's? She loathed and detested the creature! He had killed her father. There could be no possible doubt that he had killed her father. Her only thought of him should be of vengeance. Oh, why didn't Ginger do his duty and arrest him for the murder? Silly Ginger Scullion, with his bungling doubts and hesitancies!

That night again, Sally found it hard to sleep. Each little sound about the ranch disturbed her. She sat by the window a long time, trying to quiet her restless mind by studying the vast impassivity of the distant mountain peaks. The sweet, acrid air of the June night filled her room. Its coolness allayed the fever of her thoughts.

She saw Gil Ward, mounted on Green Hat, start down Baker's Pass. She saw Shorty ride into the ranch yard, put his horse into the corral and enter the bunkhouse. She saw the lights in the bunkhouse go out one by one.

Hours later, still sitting there but by that time half asleep, she saw another rider emerge from the black tangle of rock and pine that marked the end of Summit Trail and check his horse. After several minutes of immobility, he dismounted and came forward, halting again in the shadow of a huge boulder a hundred feet from the ranch house. Sally could not judge his purpose as he waited there, silent and motionless, gazing across the yard toward the dakened house. She drew further back into her room but stayed where she could see him. What brought him there again, like a thief in the night? Her father was dead. Mr. Heflin and Mr. Tapping both had departed. What then did Pete Black want at the ranch that he came there again at this hour? Was he a spy or had he a rendezvous with some as yet undisclosed partner in his crimes? She waited and watched. From the shadow of his rock, Pete did the same. It was nearly an hour before he moved. Then he went back to where he had left his horse and rode away, leaving Sally to her thoughts. He had met no one; made no ulterior move. Why had he come to the ranch?

Meals for "Spring Fever"

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,
The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

YOUNG people are not the only ones to suffer from "Spring Fever." Indeed, it is more likely that the mature adult is the one to begin complaining of "that tired feeling," and that general low mood when nothing seems exactly wrong, and yet when the first warm days bring lack of appetite and surprising restlessness. Under modern analysis, "Spring Fever" is not so much a mental as it is a physical disturbance, and one perhaps which proves the old theory that "the stomach is the seat of the emotions."

That tired feeling can almost be traced to a sluggish bodily condition due to eating too heavily of fats, starches and sweets, and too little of green, crisp and vitamin-bearing foods. The remedy then, is to change the diet, by sitting down to meals especially designed to counteract "Spring Fever" symptoms. Winter has left our old body all choked up with waste clinkers and ashes, and it, too, needs a thorough Spring cleaning just as much as the house heating plant.

The remedy may take the form of several changes in meals: we may lessen the amount of sweets, starches and fats by cutting down on cake, pastry, potatoes, butter, bacon and meat gravies; or, we can include in at least two of the daily meals a tall glass of tomato, grapefruit or orange juice; or, this same glass of refreshing liquid vitamin can be taken between meals, say at 10 a. m. and at 3 p. m.; or buttermilk may be substituted for several of the usual foods, and an entirely meatless or wholly vegetable diet may replace the usual meal.

In the average family the simplest method is to include an abundance of green foods in the regular menu and to use vegetable juices in various courses. The old-fashioned "Spring tonic" bought at the drug store was little more than an essence of green and bitter herbs, among them the lowly dandelion, sorrel, and similar leaves. The modern housewife supplies her family a more palatable tonic in the form of the vegetable juice cocktail, the vegetable broth soup, the crisp succulent salad, or the tangy dessert.

Many vegetables and kitchen odds and ends can go the way of the soup pot to emerge as a seasoned and inexpensive cocktail. The cooking liquor of such vegetables as asparagus, spinach, peas, and carrots should never be thrown away. Well-seasoned and chilled, they offer the tonic value of their respective dissolved "salts." A suspicion of onion, a dash of Worcestershire, a few drops of catsup, and the most prosaic of vegetable juices will emerge as a most agreeable "Spring tonic."

Further, this same seasoned tonic may be served in a cold form as the first course of a jellied soup or delicate chilled broth. The addition of a couple of tablespoons of granulated gelatin to about a quart of liquor will suffice to make the liquid into a pleasing jellied consistency refreshing to eat as the first course. Or again, the dissolved extract of vegetables can be used as the seasoned liquor to hold cut vegetables either raw or cooked. Thus, seasoned asparagus liquor made stiff with gelatin will serve as the base for an asparagus and carrot salad, a cucumber and tomato salad, etc.

Then there is the wider use of the green vegetables, raw or cooked, as side dish or as the main vegetable plate. And here again is the same familiar caution about cooking vegetables properly. In spite of much advice on the best way to cook green vegetables, too often they are over-cooked and allowed to become coarse, dark-colored, or flat. The great mistake is to provide too much water and to over-cook the vegetable. Shorter cooking in almost no water will retain the food's natural juices and flavor as well as conserve its special salts or vitamins.

Most green vegetables contain over 80 per cent of water in their own texture, spinach, for example, being about 97 per cent of water enclosed in light delicate leaf structure. All that is necessary for the cook is to start the vegetable's own juices running and then to cook in those same juices. As has been said so often, not more than ½ to 1 cup of boiling water need be added to any vegetable to start its proper cooking. Remember, too, that as the vegetable is washed, it absorbs considerable moisture. That is why spinach, let us say, needs not an additional drop of water to cook it perfectly.

Eliminate all cream sauces on vegetables, and be sparing of the butter used on them. The right cooking of green vegetables is fascinating and almost an unknown art to be explored by many a housewife. The addition of a teaspoon of sugar during cooking brings out flavor even more than the proverbial pinch of salt usually added. Do not use baking soda which kills the vitamins or greatly lessens their value even though it does impart a richer green color. The same results may be had by shorter cooking and allowing the lid to be off or so adjusted that there is an escape of the volatile oils which if allowed to fall back on the vegetable make it taste coarser, and cause it to become dark in color.

The vegetarian knows that many made dishes of vegetables can furnish the chief dish of the meal. The addition of a small amount of cheese, or egg in some form at once raises the food value of the vegetable in an easily digested form. Thus a dish like asparagus on toast with a cheese sauce, or baked peppers stuffed with a mixture of any other vegetables, has high food value without taxing digestion.

The ideal vegetable plate, of course, is a balance of foods both from the points of view of nutriment, texture and color. Many people dislike the so-called vegetable plate because it seems monotonous and flat. It often is! Nothing could be worse than the plate consisting of watery spinach, a serving of canned tomatoes, canned corn, and a few beets. Equally poor is the all starchy plate which has macaroni, lima beans, mashed potatoes, and perhaps one so-called green vegetable. The plate must have contrast in appearance so that it is pleasant to look at, and above all, it must be balanced dietetically so that there is not too much of any one food element.

As many foods as possible should be eaten raw because they then act more effectively as cleansing brooms to the system, and second, because the raw, crisp texture seems most to satisfy the lazy appetite.

A wedding gift in 1917, most of these Pequots are still in use today!

"WHEN I was married, nearly 16 years ago," writes Mrs. H. L. Murray of Syracuse, N.Y., "I had Pequot sheets — and am still using them! The only ones that have worn out are the small size that my husband used in camp, and that my son took to scout camp for 2 summers. They were in constant use at home, too."

Such long wear is exceptional, of course — but you can always count on extra wear from Pequot sheets and pillow cases. This year Pequot prices have been lower than at any time since 1917.

Pequot sheets are sold only under the shield-shaped Pequot label. Pequot Mills, Salem, Massachusetts.

KROGER STORES go Forward WITH A GREAT CITY

On every hand we see evidence that some Pittsburgh business concerns have faith in the future. Fine, new buildings are being added to the skyline—civic improvements are taking form. Kroger, too, has shown faith in the future of Pittsburgh. Kroger takes its place with the progressive companies who have found it necessary to expand. Today, Kroger moves into its new warehouse. Larger quarters—considerably more floor space—new facilities—all because of you—your friends—your neighbors have found Kroger Stores better food markets. For this warehouse and these stores, Kroger pays many hundreds of thousands of dollars each year in taxes, rent, improvements, water, light, power and other needs. Hundreds of residents of Pittsburgh and surrounding country are on the Kroger payroll. The money Kroger pays Pittsburgh manufacturers and packers runs into millions. Kroger believes that this is money well spent—necessary to bring to its customers the finest of foods. If you have not visited a Kroger Store lately, do so tomorrow. You will find it fully capable of supplying all your food wants. The nationally-known manufacturers whose products are mentioned in this Kroger Section of today's Sun-Telegraph join us in this invitation.

It is most fitting that we celebrate the opening of our new warehouse on the Golden Anniversary of the founding of the Kroger Grocery & Baking Co.

FOUNDER OF KROGER STORES "CRANK" ON FOOD QUALITY

B. H. KROGER
Founder of Chain of 5000 Stores

This is the man who is responsible for bringing to Pittsburgh some of the most modern food stores in the world. It was B. H. Kroger who founded and organized the company that bears his name, operating 5000 stores throughout the country.

He got his first start as clerk in a drug store. Then he worked on a farm. He then worked for a grocery store and finally purchased his first store. His business ability is shown by the fact that within three months after he opened his first store he owned two, and at the end of a year he owned four. This was the start of the present immense grocery store system.

HELLMANN'S MAYONNAISE

Interview: Miss Williams' dressing room at the Shubert Theatre, New York City

INTERVIEWER: You were superb tonight, Miss Williams. And in that blue crepe gown, your figure was absolutely ravishing. Come on! Tell me how you keep yourself so slender.

MISS WILLIAMS: I spend no time on those exercise machines, I'll tell you that. My secret, if you call it a secret, is very simple. I follow the Hellmann Slenderizing Plan.

INTERVIEWER: So you're following that plan, too! What does it allow you to eat?

MISS WILLIAMS: Almost everything, and that's why I like it. Just eat two salads every day covered with Hellmann's Mayonnaise in place of too many heavy soups and rich, fattening foods. Then cross any tendency towards increasing weight right off your list of worries!

What a delightful sounding way to keep slender and healthy! Two delicious, inexpensive salads every day covered with Hellmann's Mayonnaise, in place of heavy, fattening foods! Why not begin at once?

Remember to insist on Hellmann's. The quality, double-whipped mayonnaise. It contains breakfast eggs, special salad oils, vinegar and spices. Certain mayonnaise makers have recently introduced cheap, inferior fillers into their products in a frantic effort to lower prices. This we refuse to do. Hellmann's Mayonnaise remains a quality mayonnaise, absolutely unchanged, absolutely uncheapened.

HELLMANN'S MAYONNAISE

So get your jar of Hellmann's from your grocer. And start the Hellmann Slenderizing Plan at once. Results will amaze you.

Lovely Frances Williams (at the right), one of America's most perfectly formed women, follows this plan daily. And what it does for her, it can also do for you.

KROGER EXECUTIVES CONTINUALLY SEEK NEW IDEAS

Service to Customer One of Foremost Features of Company.

To be on constant lookout for new merchandising ideas is one of the problems which face the executives of the Kroger Grocery and Baking Company to complete their program of giving customers the best possible service. Officials of the company believe that their success is due mostly to being able to cope with such a problem.

Service and price are two of the prime factors that must be dealt with to keep the business of such a large organization moving along at a pace even with the movement of the times.

First the proper price is needed to attract the housewife into the store. Then again there must be the prompt, courteous service to follow up the price to keep customers visiting the Kroger shops. The chain store first rendered its service at the very start by asking less money by cutting frills off the old system. The second need was that of more sympathetic interest in business, more friendship based on knowledge and a new program of advertising. Today the ads tend to assure the customer of superior quality in the product and service and the same time interest the housewife in the Kroger Company.

"There's no other food like BOSCO!"

Children say so, because its distinctive chocolate malt flavor is so delicious they can hardly get enough of Bosco-in-milk.
Mothers say so, because Bosco makes youngsters eager to drink more milk. And they know that Bosco-in-milk means faster and stronger growth.
Doctors say so, because Bosco is easily assimilated, modifies the protein ratio in milk, supplies the lacking iron in milk and thus makes it a great aid for building good healthy blood.
Food scientists say so, because being treated with enzymes, Bosco not only has a finer flavor, but becomes actually pre-digested. And they proved that Bosco aids in the digestion of milk and increases its nutriment.
The whole family says so, because they find Bosco-in-milk is a most delightful drink that builds strength and energy. Delicious ice-cold or hot. Ask your dealer for Bosco.

MR. ALBERT H MORRILL

KROGER PRESIDENT HAS FAITH IN CITY

To the residents of Pittsburgh and vicinity, Albert H. Morrill, president of the Kroger Grocery and Baking Co., makes the following statements:

CITY WILL PROGRESS

"The Kroger company believes in Pittsburgh, in its solidity and progress, present and future. In spite of hard times it is willing to invest many thousands of dollars in store units for the betterment of their service to you and thus place in your midst a rounding out of its existing stores and warehouse.

INTERESTED IN COMMUNITY

"The Kroger company distributes the most essential necessity of life, 'food.' It desires to discharge its function with the utmost vitality to its public, its employes and its shareholders. It is vitally interested in every community it serves and it insists that it be a live, active part of each community.

"To this community, today, Kroger presents the last word in methods of retail food distribution and it does this with its compliments and best wishes for the present and future greatness of Pittsburgh and vicinity."

MR. D. S. FARLEY

QUALITY, AIM OF PITTSBURGH CHIEF

D. S. Farley, Pittsburgh Branch Manager of the Kroger Grocery and Baking Company, well-known throughout the country for his progressive attitude in food merchandising and store maintenance, is largely responsible for the acceptance of the 170 Kroger stores by Pittsburgh housewives. It is his policy of quality food at fair prices, sold through clean, modern stores, by competent clerks that has done so much to give Kroger's a dominance in the Pittsburgh area. Mr. Farley, recently interviewed, states:

"Due to the economic situation necessitating savings in every branch of the family budget, particular attention must be paid by food stores to the maintenance of quality. An old adage of the manufacturers says, 'There was never a product made that could not be made cheaper and sold for less.'

"Although we have been eating food all our lives, only a few of us have taken the trouble to study the thousands of items offered in grocery and meat stores today. Few have attempted to qualify or even correctly price these items. To establish a value, products must be put on a comparable basis. It is then that quality becomes such an important factor.

"Kroger has grasped the importance—the necessity of such research. Kroger has established a Food Foundation competent to study the intricacies of thousands of different products. Millions of dollars are being spent on the maintenance of this department, as well as the establishment of modern, sanitary, attractive stores, and up-to-date transportation facilities. Our purchasing department is eminently able to purchase highest quality merchandise direct from the producers. Our personnel department, too, has put much stress in training all employees in the proper and economic handling of food products. All of these are very definite steps forward in food merchandising.

"Substantiating our thoughts and applying them directly to our own Pittsburgh district, we, at Kroger's, look with pride upon our development in the past year. Not only Kroger's, but competitive companies have established and maintained beautiful, modern stores for Pittsburgh's convenience and safety. The acceptance of such a policy is reflected in the attitude of the Pittsburgh public in encouraging us with their increasing patronage."

COL. C. O. SHERRILL

COL. C. O. SHERRILL HAS ACHIEVED MUCH

Col. C. O. Sherrill, Vice President, in charge of Personnel, Public Relations and Engineering Departments, has many other achievements in a lifetime of active work, some of which are: Mapping the Philippine Islands, fortifying the Panama Canal, acting as personal aide to three presidents, and decorated by our own and foreign governments. He so conducted the affairs of the city of Cincinnati, during his terms as City Manager, that he has been called "The most outstanding Civic Administrator in the country."

Col. Sherrill has brought skill, tact and experience to the Kroger Organization. The wisdom of his counsel and the force of his character have been evidenced in a full measure. He is personally interested in the activities and the future of the Pittsburgh plants and has devoted much of his time and thought in giving Pittsburgh one of the most modern grocery warehouses in the world.

FORTY YEARS OF MEAT PACKING AND DISTRIBUTION MARK KROGER'S NATIONAL LEADER IN QUALITY MEAT

Lawrence
G. Kyte,
Pittsburgh
Director of Meats

GOV'T STAMPED BABY BEEF EXCLUSIVE WITH KROGER'S

Starting forty years ago with one small meat store, the Kroger Company has today built up a meat business which justifies the sale of meat in 2883 meat departments.

This advancement is attributed to the ideal of Mr. B. H. Kroger, founder of the company, which was to establish a food business based on QUALITY.

Following the Kroger ideal, the company has insisted on the observance of an iron-bound rule of QUALITY MEATS at all times.

All meats handled by the Kroger Company are subject to Federal government inspection. In the past year Kroger's have established a government stamp on QUALITY BABY BEEF, exclusive with Kroger's.

This Baby Beef is the choicest meat of all and its tenderness and delicious flavor has won instantaneous and lasting favor with Pittsburgh families.

All meats sold in Kroger stores are purchased directly from recognized and approved stockyards where Kroger constantly maintains a staff of supervisors to make sure that those families who purchase Kroger meats will at all times be protected. The finest cuts and the choicest meats only are allowable for purchase by the Kroger staff of buyers. All meat shipping is done only in specially built refrigerated cars. Cleanliness not only in packing, but also in the warehouse, ice room and in the refrigerator rooms of the individual stores, is the unwritten law. Every butcher, employed by the Kroger Company, is forced, too, to observe this rule. Furthermore, each butcher is specially trained to cut and dress meat in accordance with a rigid set of rules which guarantees the purchase of only the best meat by Pittsburgh housewives.

In a specially established school, groups of selected men are taught the ins and outs of meat selling. They learn not only how to cut the animal into meat steaks, chops and roasts, but also all the phases of salesmanship and merchandising connected with these sales. Three days a week the men go to school and on the other three days have actual practice in the meat departments of special stores under the supervision of master butchers who are also trained instructors. After fifteen weeks of this intensive training the men take examinations just as in a regular school and if they pass successfully they are allowed to serve you as full-fledged meat clerks.

Study Produces New Bakery Products

Only the finest of baking goods, including a full assortment of Kroger baked large and small cakes, cookies, crackers and many bulk and packed articles are featured weekly in Kroger stores.

Deliveries on bread are received daily to assure customers freshness at all times and store managers are not permitted to sell "day-old-bread," unless they specify it as such.

In keeping with the high standards for the excellent quality of merchandise, Kroger bakery products cannot be surpassed by any bakery in the city. Only the keenest attention is given the flour, sugar, eggs and all other ingredients used.

The Kroger Company has made a specialty of baking products the past number of years and have spent thousands of dollars on research and equipment.

The "Her Grace-13-Egg Angel Food," and other cakes featured in Kroger stores are the result of hundreds of recipes and experiments.

Baking officials of the Kroger Company decided there was a great market for "A CAKE JUST LIKE YOU WOULD BAKE IN YOUR OWN KITCHEN," and set out to bake just that cake.

These light, fluffy cakes were introduced to Pittsburgh and vicinity only recently and from the public acceptance they were a huge success. Women everywhere have commented favorably on the Her Grace-13-Egg Cakes and the demand has been so great they will be featured regularly each week.

Science of Food Makes Rapid Strides

The questions of a small child which stump many a fond parent are nothing compared to the thousands of queries received by the Information Bureau of the Kroger Food Foundation, whose laboratories are located in Cincinnati. The bureau answers every conceivable question concerning food, its cooking and shipment.

The Foundation endeavors to aid housewives, growers and packers through extensive research in the growing, packing, transportation and cooking of all kinds of food. In short—it is the aim of the foundation to improve methods of bringing foods from their sources to the consumers' table.

The Cincinnati laboratories are fully manned with chemical, physical and bacteriological units. In addition, there is a model kitchen where all foods are given actual cooking tests. Dining rooms are also maintained, where sample luncheons and dinners are served to groups of housewives, teachers and club women.

While the Kroger Grocery and Baking Company has no direct connection with the foundation, the company does benefit through the goodwill and public confidence created, as the foundation establishes standards of quality which could not help but make their name synonymous with quality.

KROGER BANANAS ARE RIPENED IN PITTSBURGH PLANT

Experts Handle Changes in Temperature as Fruit Is Cared For.

Bananas Are Ripened in This New Room at the Kroger Warehouse

One of the industries within an industry at the Kroger company plant is that of banana ripening.

The only things needed for this particular job are the bananas, large cork insulated rooms and machinery that duplicates the conditions of temperature of the tropics and expert attention.

PUT IN RIPENING ROOM

All bananas handled by the Kroger company are shipped to Pittsburgh from various seaports. At the local plant they are carried from the freight cars on conveyers to the ripening rooms.

The ripening rooms at the Kroger warehouse are equipped with appliances and equipment for refrigerating, heating, ventilating, humidifying and dehumidifying.

These rooms are operated by men trained in this work, who devote their entire time to bananas. They give the fruit constant attention during the ripening process. The fruit is kept from 36 to 48 hours under a 68 degree temperature with a corresponding 95 per cent relative humidity until it starts from the green state to yellow as the starch cells are gradually converted to the fruit sugar.

TEMPERATURE REDUCED

Then the temperature is reduced to 62 degrees and the fruit well ventilated and the humidity reduced to 75 per cent. This is done to harden the pulp and toughen the skin and to bring out the wax yellow color.

The danger point for bananas is 54 degrees. If they are exposed to temperature lower than that for any length of time their skins turn a dark, unattractive color.

After the bananas have ripened, those to be sent a long distance are packed by bunches in paper and sea weed to insure their freshness.

KROGER ADDS TRUCK FLEET

Drivers "Specially Trained" for Safety and Efficiency

D. S. Farley, branch manager for the Kroger Grocery and Baking Company, was recently the recipient of four eight-ton White trucks. These units are the latest and most modern type, equipped with 100-horsepower motors and Bendix Westinghouse airbrakes, which are integral with the motor and carry a tremendous braking force direct to all the wheels of both truck and trailer.

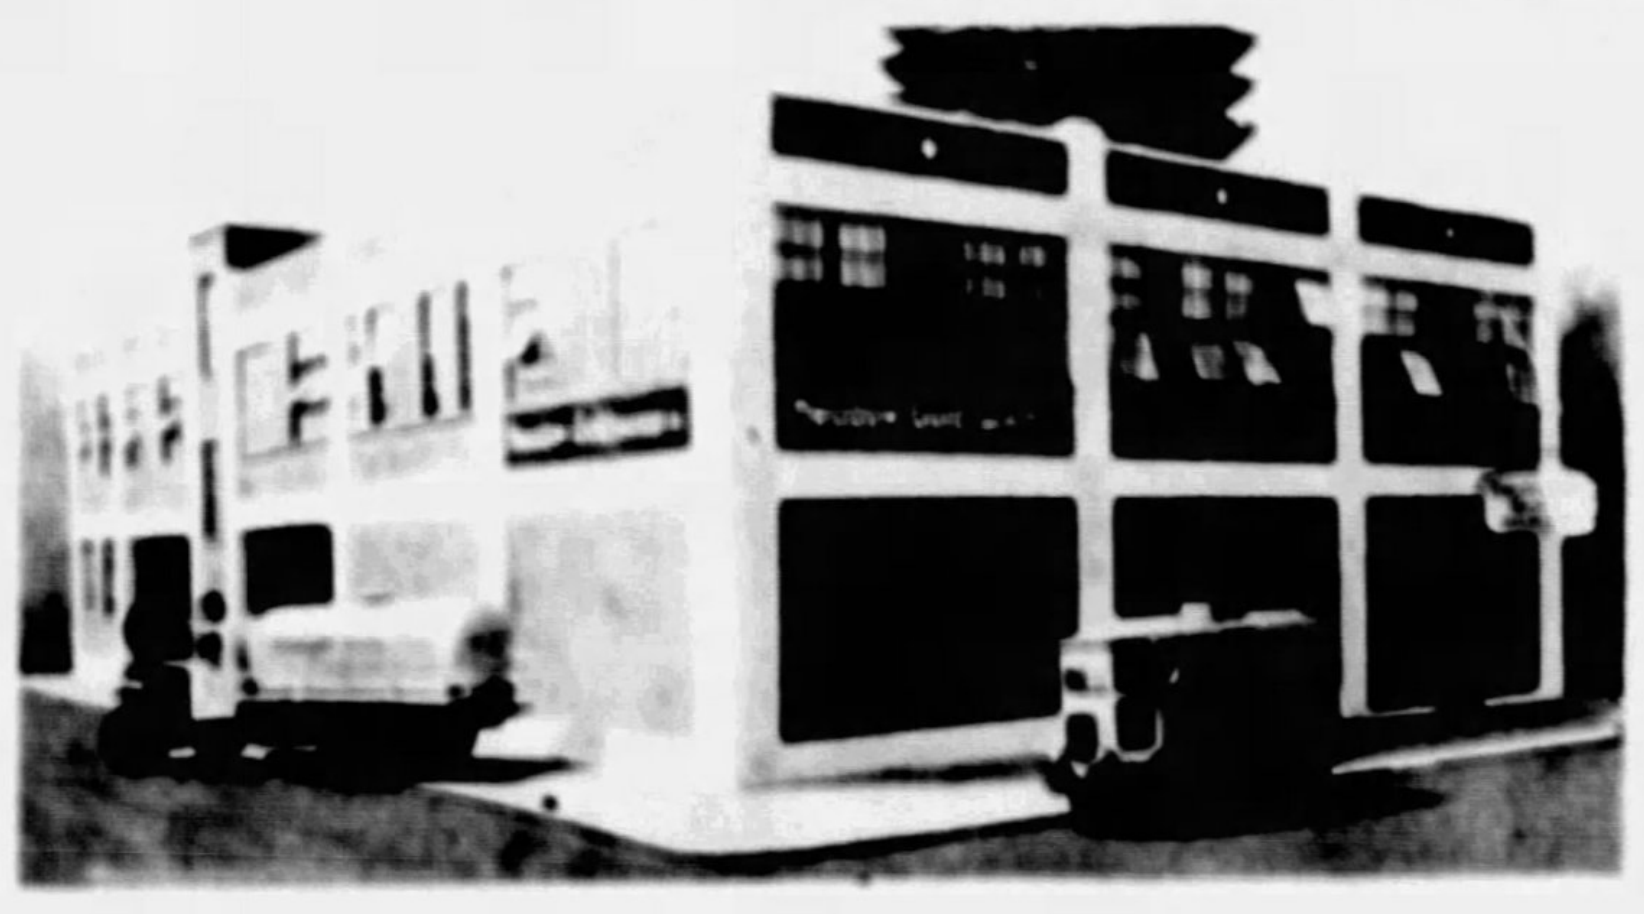
The Kroger Grocery and Baking Company has spared no expense in putting on the road the finest equipment available for the delivery of its high food products.

The assignment of the four units delivered to the Pittsburgh Kroger organization is just a forerunner of a number of other units now on order, which will be delivered to Pittsburgh in the very near future.

World Gardens and Farms Produce for Kroger's in Pittsburgh

Farms of the entire world are searched for suitable produce to be sold in Kroger's Pittsburgh stores. In most instances the provender is purchased directly from the growers, thereby insuring freshness and standardized quality which must meet the rigid Kroger specifications.

Kroger's have been pioneers in the recent move to get produce on neat, sanitary display tables within the stores. The former method of marketing on curb stands was distinctly unsanitary, the produce being contaminated by the odors of gasoline fumes, dust and all the myriad foreign substances from city streets. The new system of stands in the store allows the prospective purchaser to make selection without actually handling the food.



One of the Plants of Meadow Gold Dairies, which prepares milk and cream for the Kroger stores, also one of the 300 Meadow Gold motor trucks that delivers these dairy products to the Kroger stores, and one of the glass-lined tank trucks that brings milk from the country plants to the Meadow Gold Plants in Pittsburgh and vicinity.

Country Club Products, Kroger's Own Brand, Are Highest Grade Packaged Food

Kroger Foundation Describes Sizes, Quality and Care of Goods in Tins

Country Club products, made by the world's foremost food manufacturers, packers and growers exclusively for Kroger's, must measure up to the Kroger standard of Quality. Each product bearing the Country Club label assures you of the highest possible quality in packaged products.

Some of the more popular items of this line are Coffee, Bread, Bakery Products and Condiments, as well as a complete line of Canned Goods. This brand has been made popular by a great list of prominent producers and expert buyers and graders. They are the result of an idea of Mr. B. H. Kroger, founder of the business—the idea upon which this great grocery organization was founded — to give the consuming public QUALITY PRODUCTS AT FAIR PRICES.

Any woman will appreciate these practical suggestions for the buying and maintenance of canned foods, as prepared by the Kroger Food Foundation:

KROGER'S NATIONALLY FAMOUS COUNTRY CLUB PRODUCTS POPULAR WITH PITTSBURGHERS

1. SIZES OF CANS.

Canned foods are offered to the housewife in different sized containers. The size of a can is dependent, somewhat, upon the size and shape of the food it contains and upon a quantity convenient for use. But it has nothing to do with the quality of the food. A knowledge of the average net weight and the number of cups of the food in various sized cans is of value to the housewife.

The common size of standard cans for foods are:

| Can No. | Average Net Weight | Contents, Cupfuls |
|---|---|---|
| No. 1 | 11 ounces | 1½ |
| No. 2 | 20 ounces | 2½ |
| No. 2½ | 28 ounces | 3½ |
| No. 3 | 33 ounces | 4 |
| No. 5 | 3 lbs. 8 oz | 7 |
| No. 10 | 6 lbs. 10 oz | 13 |

The most popular sizes are No. 2½, containing large foods; No. 2, medium-sized foods, and No. 1, smaller foods. Some foods are packed in No. 3 cans. An 8-ounce can, holding one cupful, has recently been put on the market.

2. LABELS.

According to pure-food laws, the wrapper or label on the container must state (1) name of product, (2) net weight, measure or count, (3) presence of any mixture or compound used. The label usually contains a brand name and some characteristic design found only on the products of a particular firm, which is a help to the purchaser in recognizing quality grades.

3. QUALITY.

The best quality of canned foods is made only from high-grade raw material.

Some vegetables, such as corn and tomatoes, are canned without the addition of water or seasonings. Other less juicy vegetables, such as carrots and peas, have water and a very little salt added. In some cases a very little sugar is also used, as it improves flavor.

Vegetables Are Usually Packed in Three Quality Grades.

1. Fancy, for which only prime material of uniform quality, color, form and size is used. Liquid clear or only slightly cloudy.

2. Extra Standard or Choice, for which sound material of good stock, practically uniform in form and size, is used. Liquid may be somewhat discolored.

3. Standard, for which field run of good stock slightly discolored and irregular in form and size is used. Liquid may be somewhat cloudy.

A fourth grade, or sub-standard, is used for some vegetables.

Fruits are canned in syrup since syrup conserves flavor and color and helps the fruit to hold its shape. Certain kinds and qualities of fruit are usually canned in certain densities of syrup, but there is no set standard that is used by all.

Fruits Are Usually Packed in Four Quality Grades.

1. Fancy. Superlative quality and packed in extra heavy syrup. Very high color, form free from blemishes, ripe but not overripe, uniform size.

2. Choice. Fine quality and packed in heavy syrup. High color, form free from blemishes, ripe but not overripe, uniform size.

3. Standard. Good quality and packed in medium syrup. Reasonably good color, free from blemishes, reasonably uniform and symmetrical in size.

4. Seconds. Second quality and packed in 10 per cent syrup, in water or in solid pack. Tolerably uniform color, form tolerably free from blemishes, tolerably uniform in degree of ripeness and tolerably uniform and symmetrical in size.

4. General Suggestions.

a. Select a grade or brand that is suitable for the purpose for which the food is to be used. For instance, a standard grade of peas is suitable for soup but not for a fancy salad.

b. Select the size that contains the right quantity for your needs.

c. Select only cans that are in first-class condition. Tin cans should have clamped-on, not soldered lids, the ends should be flat; and the seams should be tight and clean. There should be no trace of leaks or rust. The lids of glass can should be tight and firm, and there should be no sign of leak, and the contents should appear attractive and be entirely free from any sign of disintegration.

Care of Canned Foods in the Home

Freezing temperatures are liable to affect the appearance and flavor of canned goods but do not cause the food to become harmful.

A very high temperature is injurious, and particularly so to acid foods, such as fruits.

For these reasons, storage rooms for canned foods should have a temperature above freezing. A dry place with a temperature that remains uniform below 70 degrees F. is desirable. Since all canned goods probably deteriorate gradually, it is well not to keep them in stock for a long period of time.

In opening canned foods there are certain points a housewife should train herself to observe. (1) When the can is punctured by the can opener, there should never be an escape of gas or liquid. The opposite, an inrush of air, is desired. (2) There should never be any objectionable odor. (3) The food should be entirely free from mold or decay and entirely covered by liquid. (4) The inside of the can should not show dark stains or be corroded, but should be clean and bright.

A good many housewives still fear that food permitted to stand in an opened tin can is dangerous. There is nothing in the can itself which is harmful to health. Food may stand in an opened can if (as should be the case of food in any dish) it is kept in a cool place and is protected from dirt, flies, etc.

Kroger Bread and Coffee, Staples of Modern Menu, Must Be Fresh and Pure

Country Club Bread Proves to Be Great Favorite With Pittsburgh Housewives

Country Club bread, rather recently introduced to the housewives of Pittsburgh through Kroger stores, has met with immediate acceptance. Fresh every day and made with milk, it offers one of the most tasty and nutritious elements of the daily menu. Country Club bread toasts well and is preferred as a sandwich bread because of its rich, flaky consistency. The history behind Country Club bread is rather interesting.

Modern housewives have one advantage that their grandmothers didn't have. They don't have to worry about making bread.

And they don't have to worry about whether it is going to turn out good, either. They go to their nearest Kroger store and get bread as they need it—fresh every day from the Kroger bake shop.

There's a world of romance and color about these loaves of bread and about the way that they're made.

The bake shop keeps the flour in a store room until it is wanted. The flour is blended and aged according to the dictates of modern bakery practice. This gives the bread a fluffiness it would not otherwise have.

Each day the workers carry enough flour for the day's baking into the mixing room. Here white-coated men operate spotless machinery that automatically measures the ingredients as they go into the mixture. They take the dough from the mixer as soon as it is mixed, place it in troughs, and send it to another room. Other men weigh the dough and an automatic "divider" cuts it into loaves. A "traveling power" carries it back and forth in a warm chamber to allow it to recover from the shock of cutting.

Next a molder shapes the dough to fit the pans. The men place the pans in a warm vault-like place to rise in preparation for baking. A "traveling oven" 75 feet long then receives the pans. They travel slowly thru the electrically controlled gas-heated oven until the dough has baked evenly and completely.

The fresh loaves of bread travel down a chute to a cooling room, where they gradually cool by the temperature of the room. A wrapping machine receives them and seals them tightly with wax paper for delivery to the store.

COFFEE

The Four Famous Kroger Coffees Offered to Pittsburghers

Country Club, Her Grace, Jewel and French Brand Coffees Supplied for Kroger's Offer the Housewife Unusual Choice

Country Club Coffee, the leader of Kroger's own brand coffees, is comparable with the world's finest blends. It is blended to Kroger specifications, steel-cut and packaged in vacuumized tins, ensuring perpetual freshness. Three other famous brands, Her Grace, Jewel and French brand offer the Pittsburgh housewife a choice of grinds, for the coffee is received in the bean at Kroger's Pittsburgh roasters every day, fresh roasted and ground to choice when the coffee is sold.

Flourishes in Far South

Altho the first coffee plant brought to the Western Hemisphere proved unsuccessful, it soon was learned that coffee flourished in South America. Today practically all of the coffee used in the United States is grown in South America.

The actual plant reaches a height of 15 ft. The delicate, fragrant flowers appear in white clusters, and when they drop, the coffee berries remain. These berries are picked when ripe and sent to a "pulper," which removes the hull and pulpy matter. Then they are washed, dried and hulled, after which they are graded and packed in bags for shipping.

Brands Blended Carefully

The various lots are sent to the Kroger coffee roasting plants where another test is made to insure the right grade of each kind. The different kinds of coffee are blended carefully to produce the distinctive delicacy of the Kroger brands. Some of the coffees are sharp with acid, some contain the rich flavor which gives body. Only the proper combinations produced under the supervision of experts will meet the requirements of the Kroger company.

The coffee is roasted in small quantities and watched carefully. It is sampled at each stage and the roasting stops immediately when the bean is browned sufficiently. Then it is packed and a sample sent to the office to be "cup tested" before going out to the stores. This is the final test. It is tested by itself, against other coffee from the same batch, and against other brands of coffee. Everything possible has been done to make sure of its quality.

Last, but by no means least, each store keeps just enough coffee on hand to satisfy the demand of the people. Fresh coffee is brought in daily.
